

Sermon Based On Politics

(Asheville Citizen) A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun quotes from I Samuel 22, 2, and suggests that this verse of Scripture "seems to picture the political situation today so accurately as to be almost uncanny."

Unfrosted Rector May Go In Movies

English Parson Found Guilty of Immoral Relations With Girls. Norwich, Eng.—Unfrosted, disgraced and without a rectory to call his home, the Rev. Harold Davidson, known as the rector of Stiffkey today laid plans either to go on the stage or to become a movie star.

The Bishop of Norwich, in a ceremonial marked by its formal dignity, officially deprived the Stiffkey rector of his clerical living at the Bauhan chapel of the 800-year-old Norwich cathedral.

The Rev. Mr. Davidson was present as the bishop, standing on the high altar, declared him "removed, debased and degraded from his offices of priest and deacon." He protested his innocence "in the sight of God" and made an effort to address the bishop directly as he marched from the chapel in formal procession.

The decision of the Norwich consistory court deprives the Rev. Mr. Davidson of about $1,300 annually and the use of the Stiffkey rectory. The ousted rector has received offers from Hollywood to appear in the movies and is expected, sooner or later, to cross the Atlantic to undertake a film career.

At The Theatres

George Arliss, conceded by fans to be the most polished actor of the silver screen, is opening the week at the Webb in his latest Warner Bros. picture, "The Successful Calamity." Critics have labeled the picture "an inspiring, humorous and absorbing entertainment" and the "funniest failure since 1929." Mary Astor, Evelyn Knapp, Grant Mitchell, David Torrence, William Janney, Hardie Albright and Hale Hamilton comprise the greatest supporting cast ever assembled for an Arliss production.

At the Carolina tonight, Tallulah Bankhead is married to a strange type of man—a man who is good-humored, affable and smiling in public, but insanely jealous and horribly brutal to her in private life. The people under her husband's command, believe her to be treating her husband shabbily because she is cold to him in public. She tries to escape and dashes madly into the streets in the middle of a native holiday celebration, only to be rescued from the frantic mob by a quiet, good-looking young man—Gary Cooper—who—unsuspecting of course, gets himself in "dutch" with the jealous husband. The story then becomes intense and carries on at sea, developing a grand dramatic climax which titles it the "Devil and the Deep."

Arithmetic. The flood was over, Noah told all the animals to go forth and multiply. All went but two little snakes looking discouraged and forlorn. "What's the matter?" asked Noah. "Well, you told all the animals to go forth and multiply," one of the snakes responded, "and we're adders."

Professors Going Into Politics Now

Reminds Of The Day When Professor Woodrow Wilson Started Career.

Washington—It may occasion rejoicing in some quarters that an unusual number of college professors have gone into the sordid business of politics.

In some states they are running for office. A couple are helping one of the presidential candidates assemble his material and prepare his speeches. In at least one state others have actually become a campaign issue.

The spectacle of professors in politics is by no means new. You may remember President Woodrow Wilson, who was praised for his scholarship and his progressive idealism and damned for his arbitrary school teachers' attitude.

There are ex-professors in Congress now, the most conspicuous of them to mind being Senator Simeon D. Fess of Ohio and Senator Hiram Bingham of Connecticut.

Bingham taught at Harvard, Princeton and Yale. Fess taught history at Ohio Northern and was president of Antioch College. Both belong to the extreme conservative wing of the Republican party and neither has brought anything new or interesting into the political scene.

The situation in Connecticut, where Bingham is up for reelection, has been all cluttered up with professors. The outstanding Democrat there is Governor Wilbur L. Cross, who was dean of the Yale Graduate school and has always been an instructor and an expert on English literature.

The man who may beat Bingham is Professor Albert Levitt, an insurgent Republican who is running on a dry, independent ticket and its out to lick the Republican state machine owned by J. Henry Roraback. Levitt has no chance of winning the election himself, but if the contest is close he may draw off enough votes from Bingham to give it to Congressman Augustine Lonergan, the Democratic nominee.

Professor Harry M. Ayres of Westport, a Columbia University professor and former member of the legislature, seemed fairly certain to be the Democratic nominee against Professors Bingham and Levitt until he fell into a row between the Smith-Roosevelt factions and was nosed out by Lonergan.

Professor Raymond Moley, a Columbia university economist, is frequently described as the chief Roosevelt strategist.

Out in Utah the Democratic senatorial nominee is Professor Elbert D. Thomas, who threatens to steal the toga of the venerable Senator Reed Smoot. He is 49, teaches political science and history at the University of Utah and, like Smoot, is a Mormon—although smoot may receive church support in the end because of his high church position.

Paul V. McNutt, likely to be elected as Democratic governor of Indiana, is a former head of the American Legion, a business man and a politician, but he also has been dean of the Indiana University school of law since 1925. He is an aggressive champion of public utility regulation.

Professor Jennings Randolph, a Democratic nominee for congress in West Virginia, teaches rhetoric and oratory at David and Elkins college.

Doughton Chance For An Important Office Is Better

North Carolinian May Be Chairman Of Ways And Means Committee.

Washington—The withdrawal of Representative James W. Collier of Mississippi from the Democratic race for re-election has placed Representative Robert L. Doughton of Laurel Springs, North Carolina, in line for the chairmanship of the ways and means committee in the seventy-third congress.

With the resignation from the house early this month of Representative Charles R. Crisp, of Georgia, acting-chairman of the committee, Representative Henry T. Rainey of Illinois, was left as the next ranking majority member, but, inasmuch as Mr. Rainey is majority leader of the house, it is not thought likely that he will be a candidate to succeed Chairman Collier.

Doughton Ranks Next Representative Doughton ranks next to Rainey, and according to the seniority rule which has long prevailed in the lower chamber, Mr. Doughton will be automatically promoted.

Even if Representative Collier had been re-elected this fall, it is considered doubtful if he could have remained long as chairman of the ways and means committee. He has been suffering from very poor health, and during the last session of congress was compelled to give way to Representative Crisp.

Of course, Mr. Doughton's chance of becoming chairman depends primarily upon whether the house goes Democratic next month, but no serious or impartial mind in Washington today believes, or hardly entertains a hope, that the seventy-third congress will be less Democratic than it was the second session of the seventy-second.

To Fight Sales Tax When and if Representative Doughton does assume the chairmanship of the committee which initiates and largely molds the federal fiscal policy of the country, one thing is certain, and that is that he will be an uncompromising foe of those members who will, in all probability, revive the manufacturers' sales tax fight.

During the last session of congress, when the sales tax was proposed, Mr. Doughton stood almost alone among his Democratic colleagues in bitterly condemning every move made for such a tax. He led what at first appear to be a minority fight against the Garner-Rainey-Crisp move to incorporate a sales tax in the 1932 revenue bill, but he persisted in his opposition until he was joined by the insurgent progressive Republican La Guardia of New York's upper east side, and later by other Republicans and members of his own party from the southland. Eventually Mr. Doughton won his fight, and he was credited with a large share of the victory by all house members.

Persistent Fighter Mr. Doughton is a persistent and insistent fighter when he believes he is right, and as chairman of the ways and means committee he is right, and as chairman of the ways and means committee he would be in a formidable position to prevent even the reconsideration of a sales tax on the floor of the house.

From present indications, however, all effort he might put forth to curb a revival of the sales tax fight will be met with the sternest opposition, and, if the present treasury deficit continues to pile up, there are a large number of fiscal experts in Washington who believe that a manufacturers' sales tax, or some other agency of equal revenue producing potentialities, will have to be resorted to if the nation's finances are again to be placed on a budget balancing basis.

After one of the heaviest votes ever cast in the State primaries, Governor Philip La Follette (left), of Wisconsin, champion of the Progressive faction, went down to defeat before former Governor Walter J. Kohler, Conservative, for the Republican nomination for Governor. Observers say that Kohler's victory is significant inasmuch as it is an indication that the La Follette dynasty, which has governed Wisconsin over a period of a quarter of a century, has fallen from power.
