

Newton Baker Says Another War Looms

And When It Comes, He Doesn't Think America Could Keep Out Of It.

Cleveland, O., Dec. 5.—When the next war comes, it will be almost impossible for the United States not to become involved, Newton D. Baker, former secretary of war, told the foreign affairs council here Friday.

"Whether we remain neutral will not depend upon the rightness or wrongness of the conflict but upon what we regard as our rights," he explained. "If we say we will have no dealings with either combatant, we are likely to anger both, and if we choose to deal with one, we probably shall make the other angry."

Baker added that if this country should decide to remain neutral, it may have the question of whether it will consent to having its ships remain in harbor or have them carry goods and encounter a question of what constitutes contraband goods, leading to friction and perhaps to our own entanglement in the war.

The former secretary said the world is living "in a powder magazine, and some are walking about with steel and others with flint."

Wheelbarrows Are Scarce Since NRA

Raleigh, Dec. 4.—The civil works program has exhausted the wheelbarrow supply in Mecklenburg county, North Carolina.

Laborers are now building their own barrows from old wheels and oil drum cut in two.

Coastal farmers, now housing their corn crop, report that the acre yield was cut at least by 40 percent by the storms of early fall.

79 Symphonic North Carolinians

The pictures shows the 79 members of the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra, all North Carolinians, who will play under the direction of their Director, Lamar Stringfield, at the Charlotte Armory auditorium tomorrow night. Mr. Stringfield, who comes from Western North Carolina, is director of the N. C. Symphony Society and was winner of Pulitzer prize for American compositions in 1928. A feature of special interest at the Charlotte concert will be the playing of "The Legend of John Henry," called Mr. Stringfield's greatest composition since 1928. Mr. Stringfield has not only demonstrated that the state has enough musicians of symphony calibre to for man orchestra, but that it is practical to give a good performance after two days rehearsal.
