Farmers Warned Not To Increase Cotton Acreage

Shoffner Explains Crop Decree

Signers Of Reduction Pact May Not Lease Other Land Unless It Is Placed Under Quota.

Cotton growers who have signed the reduction agreement with the United States government will not be permitted to rent land on another farm and increase their acreage unless the rented land has already been placed under the reduction quota.

Contract Required
There seems to be some misunderstanding in regard to the farming land that is not under contract to the government.

As to those who borrowed four cents on their cotton option, I would like to make it clear that by doing this they turned this cotton over to the government to sell at their discretion.

Kidnapers Attack Jailer In Lincoln; Escape Is Foiled

Jake Huss Saved By Son's Pistol Shots

Federal Agents Say Pair Confessed To Rock Hill Robbery; Jailer's Son Saves His Father.

Two prisoners held in the Lincoln county jail on charges of robbery and kidnaping attempted to escape yesterday with an attack on the jailer, Jake Huss, but were quelled by revolver shots from Kemp Huss, the jailer's son.

When Huss went into the cell block late Wednesday afternoon to feed the prisoners, he could find but one.

They are Brady Barret and J. W. Baker, who were arrested at the home of Hardy Long, near Lincoln.

When Mr. Huss went into the cell block to feed them, one of them, who had concealed himself, sprang on him. The young Huss came to his father's aid, and calmed the prisoners with a few shots from his revolver.

The officers said the two young men gave a detailed account of how they had gone to Rock Hill from Columbia, S. C., Monday and had hired a taxi for a short trip.

Directing the driver to get in touch with his folks by telephone, according to the confession, the pair proceeded to Lincoln after burning two grips found in the taxi containing clothing and papers.

The federal agents said the men would be given a hearing in York, S. C., in the near future. Meanwhile, they are being held in the York county jail.

Weavers Protesting Discharge Of Shop Committee Member

To Wed Commoner

494 Employees Are Barred From Work; Mill Picketed

Mull Charges Lax Discipline, Asserts Workers Irked Because Closed Shop Was Refused.

Just one week to the hour after a decision by the National Cotton Textile Industrial Board had forced protesting Cleveland Cloth union workers to accept six looms per man instead of five, a dispute arose in the mill yesterday which precipitated a walk-out which this morning silenced all looms in the mill.

Union leaders called the walk-out when Rodney Wilson, a weaver, and a member of the shop committee, was discharged by Overseer Gene Franks. Wilson, it was reported, left his looms, six of which were in operation, to go to another part of the building.

Wilson men stated this morning that Wilson, the discharged employee, had simply gone to another part of the mill on a mission connected with his work and was immediately discharged.

At 6 o'clock last night, 225 workers walked out, and this morning only a handful of the 494 employees showed up for work.

O. M. Mull, secretary-treasurer of Cleveland Cloth and partner of O. Max Gardner, said this morning that the weaving room strike involved only 154 workers, but that all other departments, such as slasher, quilters and preparation room workers, were forced to quit also.

In the absence of textile workers executives, who have been in and out of Shelby all week, the labor situation was taken in hand by P. R. Christopher, secretary of the local union and newly-elected president of the North Carolina Federation of Textile Workers.

Christopher said discrimination was being shown by the mill. He said he had tried to get in touch with George L. Goode, southern representative of William Green, president of the Federation of Labor, but had failed.

C. W. Bolick, textile workers organizer, was also out of town at the time the strike was called.

P. R. Christopher, spokesman for the local union, when asked by The Star for a statement, said this afternoon that he preferred not to say.

Since the CWA is drawing to a close, those who do not trouble to re-register, as requested, will not be considered.

School Bond Cut Is Held Advisable By State Engineer

Baity Urges Washington To Reduce Estimate On Dover Mill And High School Arcade.

A cut of $6,000 in Cleveland county's protested bond issue for city schools has been recommended by State Engineer H. G. aBity to the PWA authorities in Washington.

The bond issue was passed a week ago by the county commissioners the county acting as agent for the city of Shelby in obtaining the money through the Federal government. Residents of many townships protested, believing that the county was obligating itself on a city project, but withdrew their protests when the plan was fully explained to them.

The amount of $34,000 is not needed, the commissioners explain. The engineers in Washington believed local estimators had set the figure too low—$25,000—and so raised it to $34,000. Nineteen thousand dollars will be enough to build the Dover Mill school and the High school arcade, Engineer Baity estimates.

The new numbering system, so widely discussed, is to be explained in the book, but this note is printed on the upper right hand corner of the map: "LaFayette street is the dividing line north to south for streets running east and west; Marion street is the dividing line east to west for streets running north and south."

State Crop Values Jump Up 88 Millions Over Year 1932

Tobacco Lead The State In Increased Values, While Cotton Was Second.

North Carolina crop values totaled $192,596,000 in 1933, a jump of $88,428,000 over the preceding year, and the State shot up to fourth place among states of the Union.

Only Texas, California and Iowa outranked this State in 1933. From 1919 to 1921 North Carolina ranked fourth and fifth, but later slipped backwards. In 1931 it was ninth in the value of crops and was sixth in 1932.

Tobacco and cotton led this state's big gain, the value of the tobacco crop last year being placed at $83,553,000, an increase of $48,280,000 over 1932. The value of the cotton crop jumped by $13,335,000, totaling $33,465,000 last year.

Governor Ehringhaus, apprised of the figures, declared he was "infinitely satisfied," and singled out the huge increase in the value of tobacco crop, North Carolina's greatest farm revenue raiser.

He recalled the struggle which, with federal aid, increased the price of tobacco from around $11 per hundred pounds to around $17. A greatly increased production of weed also accounted for some of the gain.

Crop values in Texas, which led the states in the Union, totaled $353,378,000 last year, according to official figures made public through the statistical division of the North Carolina Agriculture Department.

California was second with values aggregating $277,077,000, while Iowa with $214,492,000 was third, and North Carolina next with its $192,596,000, followed by Illinois, reporting a total of $158,563,000.

The 1933 total for North Carolina was divided as follows: Tobacco, $83,553,000; cotton, $33,465,000; truck and vegetables, $11,841,000; fruits, $5,941,000; hay and forage, $8,480,000; annual legumes, $7,712,000; cash grains, including wheat, rye, etc., $4,260,000; miscellaneous, $5,376,000.
