

Job Of Being A Senator Tough, Reynolds Learns

Some of the tribulations of being a United States senator were described by "Our Bob" Reynolds in a recent interview with Billie Schroeder of the Washington Times. The job wasn't just what he thought it would be, Bob said.

A senator's job is not all it is pictured, according to Senator Robert Reynolds—"Bob" Reynolds of the state of North Carolina.

The North Carolinian is just completing his first year as a member of the upper house, and he says:

"It is all very different from the way I pictured it. Now I thought, before I came to Washington, that being a senator would be grand. I am myself sauntering into my office about 10 or 11 in the morning, dropping over to the Capitol at noon and closing my office around 3:30 or 5.

"I thought my evenings would be spent going to receptions, meeting diplomats, talking to statesmen—all that sort of thing."

A few weeks in Washington, however, taught the new senator that he had to get up at 5 o'clock, grab a bite to eat at his office by 6, and he expected to have a few undisturbed hours to read his mail and dictate.

Senator Reynolds claims he has the largest visiting and phoning constituency in the country. He will meet his daily list of callers, man and woman to man and woman, against those of even Senator Millard Tydings.

He says: "They come to Washington by truckloads and they all want to see me. I have anywhere from a hundred to two hundred visitors a day. About half of them I have to see personally. The worst of the matter is that a senator can't be out of the floor and in the reception room at the same time."

The senator's mail is another problem. He made, he says his campaign on a personal "Bob-to-you" basis. As a result:

"My secretaries might write a letter to some man I've been calling him and call him Mr. Jones. There would go a friend forever. And supposing they signed Robert Reynolds to Jim's letter. He'd think Bob Reynolds was getting high hat."

His problem, Senator Reynolds says, is one confronting many of the men from nearby states—although he claims he gets it in bigger doses.

His suggestion for a remedy is for every senator to have three personal secretaries to answer mail, greet visitors and watch newspapers for items regarding the senator's constituents.

However, he says: "Understand, I like my job. But it isn't what I thought it would be."

Tar Heel Congress Members Lay Off In M'Ninch Dispute

None Replies To Bailey's Request To Ask President Re-appoint Him.

WASHINGTON, June 14.—A new angle to the fight of Senator Bailey of North Carolina against the re-appointment of Frank R. McNinch of Charlotte to the Federal Power commission developed yesterday when it was revealed that the Tar Heel house members are hands-off in the fight.
 On June 6, Senator Bailey wrote each of the 10 members a letter in which he said:

"I have written the president against the re-appointment of Frank McNinch to the Federal Power commission. I would like for you to do the same thing."
 Gets No Response
 It is a week today since the members all received the notice from Senator Bailey, and a canvass of the delegation showed that not a single member has taken any action. Representative Robert L. Doughton, dean of the delegation, and the recognized leader among the house members, said tonight "No. I have not done anything about it." Asked if he had replied to Senator Bailey's letter he said that he had not. Other members said that they had taken no steps, as they did not desire to become involved in the Bailey-McNinch imbroglio.

The position of one of the prominent members of the delegation who has also remained passive was outlined to The Observer correspondent. Regarded as the position of the entire delegation his position is: That a member of the Federal Power commission is named by the president with "the advice and consent" of the senate, that it is senatorial patronage, or personal patronage of the president as the case may be, and no reason has been vouchsafed why the house members should become involved.
 To Remain Hands-Off
 Investigation also revealed that unless something unforeseen happens that the house members would remain hands-off, look to their own knitting and be content to recommend postmasters in their districts, and let it go at that. It was emphasized by one member that he hoped that Senator Bailey would not be offended, but that as he construed the letter it was solely within the discretion of the house member as to what course he pursued.

It is also not definitely known what Senator Reynolds will do. He had not returned from Chapel Hill tonight, where he went to see his son graduated from the state university. McNinch's term expires June 24, after congress adjourns, and it is expected that he will be given a recess appointment. After Senator Bailey's speech in the senate today against the confirmation of Rexford Tugwell for undersecretary of agriculture, the effect of the letter he has written against McNinch has caused speculation.

Miss Edna McSwain of near Cherryville was the week-end guest of Misses Maggie Lou and Vernia Mae Wright.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Wright spent the week-end in this community with relatives.

Dispute Brings Smile

While Senator Ellison D. Smith of South Carolina, chairman of the senate agricultural committee, and Senator Louis Murphy of Iowa wrangled bitterly and nearly came to blows during the hearing, Rexford Guy Tugwell smiled broadly as the agriculture committee sought to determine the fitness of Tugwell to occupy the new post of under-secretary of agriculture, created for him by President Roosevelt. Senator Smith took exception to Senator Murphy's remark that the hearing was an attack on the administration.

"Dear Dad!"

SOME day from the quiet of a cozy college room your boy will write you a letter. Clumsily worded, perhaps, for it will not be easy to put onto paper the sudden proud affection he feels for you. But by it you will know that your foresight of years has been rewarded. For the steady, careful planning, the budgeting and saving by which you have been able to give him the privilege of that college education will at last have been brought home to him. He will know what he has never fully known before: that he is a lucky boy to be your son.

And you will bless that long-past day when you opened a savings account.

NRA Denies Mills' Right To Operate On Full Time

WASHINGTON, June 14.—NRA today denied applications of a cotton textile mill, a bleachery, and 18 underwear knitting mills for exemption from the 25 per cent curtailment order issued for summer production. At the same time a temporary extension was granted to a group of mills manufacturing outing flannels.

H. O. King, division administrator, said the exemptions committee of the cotton textile code authority and the industrial and labor advisory boards had recommended that the applications be denied. The consumers advisory board, he said, had requested that the applications be approved.

The curtailment order, effective for 12 weeks, was issued by Hugh S. Johnson because of what he said were increasing unsold stocks coupled with declining unfilled orders.

A general strike to compel modification of the order was called but later was abandoned pending further studies.

The applications refused were of the Cherokee Spinning company,
