The Suffering Servant

The International Uniform

Sunday School Lesson for Oct. 6. URNING from New to Old I Testament studies in the fourth quarter, we consider the to Malachi. The first lesson of the quarter presents the suffering servant in the fifty-third chapter of Isaiab -a chapter that almost unerringly has been taken as prophetic of Christ, though there can be little doubt that it had primary reference to a suffering ervant nearer to the times in which the prophet wrote. . It is commonly believed by New Testament scholars that the later chapters of Isaiah are by another band than the early chapters, and come out of a later period, when Israel bad undergone the tragedy of exile and suffering in Bahylon.

in the conception of the prophet the nation was not only explating its own sins, but was bearing the burden of sip in the process of human redemption. with which we have become so familiar in the New Testament story of the mission and death

F one pictured the problem of the prophet in the crisis that Israel was facing, he can understand something of the source and reality of the noble, religious ideas of this lesson and of the accompanying chapters in the latter part of the Book

Here was a people professing to be the chosen people of God, to whom there had been great promises and whose literature was full of sublime triumphs and the evidences of divine leader-The conception of a glo personalities of older prophets rious kingdom in which Israel and leaders of Judah, from Isaiab should lead and share was en-

But how could these promises and purposes of God concerning Israel be fulfilled in a nation that had been blasted by war, torn up by the roots and taken off in exile to a far and unfriend ly country? Was there no justice and no hope as men looked un in the light of the spiritual history of the nation?

I'HIS problem the prophet I faced with insight and daring. He saw that, while the in nocent suffer with the guilty. there is redemptive power in the sufferings of the innocent.

The way of redemption and progress lies through suffering and sacrifice. There is no effort to explain why this is so, but the prophet insists that even in exile a nation called of God may fulfill its destiny and give its message and leadership to tho

How gloriously has that faith and hope been fulfilled in history! The Jews in many lands are still in exile or in execuation. yet from this race with its prophets, and its saints, and its Savior have come the richest and noblest ideals and the truest visions of the redeemed society.
