Notes And News From Here And There About Cleveland County People You Know

MAX GARDNER is planning a surprise trip to Mexico City to visit his friend of long-standing, Ambassador Joseph Daniels. Mr. Daniels is commenting today at length in The Star on that special edition issued Sept. 27th. He keeps a touch with home and memories of Cleveland were refreshed when he spent an entire evening reading that historical edition. Max will take his longest plane trip when he sets out for Mexico City.

Southard's grandfather who was a boss. These modern cars do travel and these drivers have no fear of speed. A party of Shelby youngsters returned from the football game in Raleigh last Saturday in four hours driving time. The distance of over 200 miles has been covered in less time. And speaking of distances, Knoxville, Tenn., and Atlanta, Ga., are not much farther away than our own state capital.

TAKE UP A HOBBY, was the advice of several physicians who looked over a Shelby man suffering with angina. One Md. suggested that he try amateur photography. That was too expensive. Another would have him gather antiques, which, too, is an expensive pastime. The third specialist suggested the recording of strange epitaphs on tombstones in old cemeteries. That was too "reminiscent" for an angina sufferer.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON in Shelby has taken on that annual trend of buying when residents from out in the county make their annual or semi-annual trips to "town" to lay in the needed supply of goods. Here and there is an aged colored man with his arms full of overalls and four or five little piccaninies with boxes that must contain shoes. Likely his buying spell cost him at least his part of two or three bales of cotton and probably will not occur until next year at the same time.

NO GEESSE OR DUCKS have sojourned on the Lineberger-Thompson lake thus far this season, indicating that winter is some distance away. Capt. Broadway became a highway constructor 28 years ago yesterday and has been engaged in that business constantly except for a year devoted to real estate. John Southard, machinist at the Dover Mill, has a picture of the employees who worked in the old Schenck Mill at Cleveland Mills. About 25 employees made up the pay roll and one of them was Mr.

Merchants realize that this is the time of the year, consumers have more money and will bargain for sales almost recklessly. Extra clerks work overtime to wrap garments and household articles to be used in rural homes. When money flows freely, everybody is happy.

HIGH UP IN THE AIR, resembling a giant bird but with vaster poise and speed and with a drone that tells one that three throbbing engines keep it up there, one may see at dusk the huge mail plane winging its way across the sky. When it was very cold the other day we noticed it, skimming along through the air and the next morning appreciated more the letter "air mail." In rain or shine, sleet or snow, daylight or dark, the mail has to go through, and very little is known about the actual technicalities that Uncle Sam has to overcome to give us fast air service.

CHARLES A. EVERETT, correspondent of The Star from Grover worked in Shelby last fall and winter, aiding in the government census and found out a lot of things while here. Among the interesting things which he remembers seeing while going from place to place include:

A sampler made in 1819 by Helen Vasseur at the age of 12, hanging on the wall of the parsonage home of Dr. E. K. McLarty. He also recalls that an old fashioned hour-glass, by which time was measured as fine sand poured through, is one of the choice possessions.

A log house, which you would never guess had a log about it, at 404 East Marion, now occupied by Roy Sisk, Mary Reeves Forney and other members of the family. The house has been done over (both inside and out. He was told that the original structure is at least 150 years old. This column would be glad to know if there is a house in Cleveland county which approaches that age. Let us know. Old things command respect. They reflect character and quality by having lasted so long. They also revive memories and recollections of people who lived at that time who made other contributions to the welfare of this section.
