Talks To Parents

By BROOKE PETERS CHURCH Cause Of Truancy

In dealing with children there is al ways danger of confusing the cause of their behavior with the result. The result shows and is probably immediately annoying. The cause is often so deeply hidden that even the child is unconscious of it.

Truancy is a case in point. There is far more real truancy than the truant officer ever reaches. The chiloren who frankly refuse to go to school, or who, having set out with books and lunch-box, go swimming or fishing or attend the movies, are only a small fraction of those who one way or another avoid school.

Many of the minor ailments of childhood-headaches, digestive upsets, nervous derangements, causeless temperatures-may at times be a subconscious, often successful, protest against the daily grind.

But behind this apparently reasenable dislike for work is generally another deeper reason for the child's malingering. Most children go to school as a matter of course whether they like it or not and to some extent at least most of them like it They may not enjoy the lessons, but they do enjoy the companionship of the other children and are satisfied to conform with the rule of school attendance.

When a child really fights school. behind the symptoms.

The child may be under a strain owing to some emotional disturbance in the home; he may be conscious of some physical defect which puts him at a disadvantage in school; the fault may lie in the school itself—the attitude of the teacher or the way he is taught or disciplined-or he may be bored

The Court Drives Home a Point!

Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, left, was emphatic as he talked with Representative William B. Bankhead (Dem., Ala.), right, at the recent vice president's dinner to President Roosevelt. Bankhead is the author of the cotton control law which the president has asked Congress to repeal. Cotton and the AAA, however, were not popular topics at the reception.
