

Talks To Parents

By BROOKE PETERS CHURCH
Care Of Pets

John was given a pair of pet rabbits on the condition that he would be responsible for their care and feeding. The first week or so he was very faithful in his duties, but rabbits are insatiable beasts, and after the first enthusiasm of owning them wore off, John grew tired of foraging for them and frequently let them go hungry.

His parents refused to interfere, and when John came in one day in tears to announce the death of his pets, were glad of the chance to read him a lesson on cruelty to animals. It did not occur to them that they too were guilty of cruelty, and had sacrificed the rabbits and allowed them to suffer quite as much as had the owner of the pets.

It is the duty of parents to see to it that in teaching their children to care for animals they do not indirectly cause suffering. It is not humane to turn one's back and put the whole burden of responsibility on the child. Nor is it just to the child, who has had too little experience to appreciate the need of systematic routine.

Some children accustom themselves readily to the care of pets, others never do. If the parents are not willing to oversee the child and be at least in part responsible for the animal's well-being, they should find another home for it, or else put it out of its misery quickly.

The child is more apt to be faithful to his duty if he realizes from the outset that his pet will be taken from him at any sign of neglect. If, on the other hand, he sees that his parents are so callous as to let the creature die for the sake of teaching him a lesson, he is more likely than not to develop indifference to animals.

Ten demonstration farms in Henderson county cleared an average of 8.05 per cent on the money invested in each place.

Black-Draught

The confidence thousands of parents have in good, old reliable, powdered Black-Draught has prompted them to get the new Black-Draught for their children. The new Black-Draught is the powdered Black-Draught the youngsters probably will prefer if when they outgrow their childish love of sweets. I saw Adams of Murray, Ky. writes: "I have used Shedd's Black-Draught (powder) about fifteen years, taking it for indigestion, constipation, etc. and I am always pleased with the results. I wanted a good, reliable laxative for my children. I just bought a box of Black-Draught to be just that."

Isolated Rangers Study Wild Life In Big Rockies

Deep in the great national forests of the northern Rockies several score rangers and wildlife specialists from forest service regional headquarters at Missoula, Mont., are studying habits and "home life" of such game animals as bear, elk, mountain sheep, goats, deer and antelope during the months of ice and snow.

Living in isolated cabins and seeking out the winter haunts of animals, these men check on such questions as these: How many of each species are living on the forests? Is there sufficient food for animals "wintering" in a given locality? What are losses from disease, starvation, predatory animals, and hunters? What are feeding habits of animals, carrying capacity of feeding grounds, types of forage preferred, and types and quantities available? Special consideration will be given to a study of any conflict between game and domestic stock.

Distribution of game, once satisfactory methods of regulating annual kills have been established, will not be difficult. Most species will repopulate natural game ranges up to carrying capacity if they are given a fair chance. At present, much of the best deer country is depopulated because it is easily accessible to hunters. In other places, with little or no hunting, deer abound. These factors must be balanced.
