

Perfume Flowering Abandoned But Expert Tells of New Plan

Many plant flower beds for color and decorative masses, kitchen gardens for utility, herb gardens for savor, but only a few plants for perfume in the garden or in cut flowers.

Women of Martha Washington's time knew how to save the delicate scent of rose petals by putting them in jars with salt, or they made a potpourri of different flowers. They gathered damask, roses, and lavender and dried them to make linen drawers sweet, or used violet water. They liked the scent of lilacs-of-the-valley and lilacs.

It is possible to plant shrubs and vines and flowering annuals and perennials to add to fragrance of the garden—roses, English violets, carnations, and little clove pinks, and some of the fragrant peonies for indoor vases, say floriculturists in the United States Department of Agriculture. There are so many fragrant annuals and perennials for the home garden that a choice depends on preference and climate.

The perfume garden is so planned that one group of plantings is succeeded by another, each with its own appeal, such as sweet alyssum, mignonette, pink, perennial Phlox, sweet heliotrope, stock and some of the nicotianas. Nasturtiums have a spicy fragrance. The leaves of rose geranium are both fragrant and spicy and may scent a fingerbowl of flavor a mild jelly.

Many shrubs are delightfully fragrant—the reddish velvety "swamp-shrub" or Calycanthus; lemon verbena; lilac; and m-orange, called Philadelphia or syringa in the north. Carolina cherry in the south; the butterflybush (erroneously called "summer lilac") from China, whose long drooping rich violet blooms give off deep fragrance all summer. The sweet-scented summer-blooming honey-suckle vine of the south is the naturalized Japanese honeysuckle, Lonicera japonica, ranging from Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Missouri south; the beautiful and fragrant Chinese and Japanese wisteria and various sweet species of clematis.

Talks To Parents

By BROOKE PETERS CHURCH Newcomer

The doctrine of "original sin" seems to have answered a basic need in the human race. In spite of all the teaching to the contrary and their own better judgment, parents and teachers alike continue to go on the theory that children are born naturally bad and must be taught to be good.

Children are not born bad or good. They are newcomers in a strange world and must be taught the rules and regulations by which they will be expected to live. One gives a foreigner, newly landed and with no previous knowledge of the country, every kind of allowance. He makes mistakes, is rude and gauche, but is not at once told that he is bad, or laughed at for his errors. People are polite and sympathetic.

For some reason, however, children very often are not given so much consideration. They are supposed to know by instinct what they can and cannot do, and are punished or scolded or laughed at for many things which they did out of pure ignorance.

To tell a child who throws a cat into the pond that he is wicked to treat the poor thing that way may be quite unjust. If he has had no previous experience with cats, he may have thought it would swim like a dog, and enjoy the ducking. To laugh at a child for a breach of etiquette or a misuse of English is to humiliate him as one would never think of humiliating a foreigner.

Often a little careful explanation is all that is needed. The small boy who, when he has learned better, tortures the cat, is often the one who was punished the first time he did it, and is now getting back at the cat for his own pain. Children naturally are reasonable and eager to conform to the accepted standard.

HOW'S your HEALTH

Edited by Dr. Logo Goldston Academy of Medicine

The Time To Vaccinate. Unquestionably the great triumph of modern scientific medicine is that of smallpox vaccination. The present generations of men are in no position to appreciate the ravages which were once inflicted by this horrible disease.

To gather any idea of the toll in life and disfigurement which smallpox exacted, one must turn to history. The eloquent pen of Lord Macaulay thus described smallpox: "That disease, over which science has since achieved a succession of glorious and beneficent victories, was formerly the most terrible of all the ministers of death. The havoc of the plague had been far more rapid; but plague had visited our shores only once or twice within living memory; and the smallpox was always present, filling the churchyards with corpses, tormenting with constant fears all whom it had not yet stricken, leaving on those whose lives it spared the hideous traces of its owner, turning the babe into a changeling at which the mother shuddered, making the eyes and the cheeks of the betrothed maiden objects of horror to the lover."

The triumph of science over this minister of death stands to the eternal credit of Jenner. Smallpox vaccination spared man the hazards of the disease. However to profit most completely and with the least risk by vaccination, it should be administered during the first year of life. The evident exception to this counsel, of course, is in the instance of emergency vaccination necessitated by the appearance of smallpox in the community.

Vaccination is urged during the first year of life because in a small, insignificant percentage of cases, smallpox vaccination given at a later stage in life may be complicated by the appearance of what is known as a post-vaccinal encephalitis.

Another counsel for the escape of this complication is to administer smallpox vaccination after a child has been immunized against diphtheria.
