Agent Barrow Presents Paper At National Meet

ty Agricultural Extension Service staff is presenting paper this week meeting of the National Association of County at the annual Agricultural

Agents in Fargo, N.D.

William Barrow Jr., the county's associate agricultural extension agent responsible for agronomic, horticultural and pesticide education programs, is one of 20 agents sharing professional know-how in the association's "Search For Excellence" program.

His paper is on the county agency's Urban Integrated Pest Management Program, now in its third year and the only one of its kind in the state. For a fee, a scout or technician with horticultural training works with homeowners to improve their landscaping. The program has involved 126 homeowners, most having relocated to the county.

Stanley To Move To Georgia

Stanley, who came to Durham from the Brunswick County Emergency Management Agency and has been in emergency management for the past 12 years, sees the new position as the crowning achievement in the field.

He is currently the immediate past president of the National Coordinating Council on Emergency Management. He recalls as highlights his testifying before the Senate and House Committees on Emergency Management and a special Senate committee on Disaster, Relief and Assistance.

Stanley sites his accomplishments in Durham as developing an allhazard approach emphasizing intraand inter-governmental community coordination; and a growing awareness that responsibility for disaster management capability rest with the community as a whole, not merely the fire, emergency medical services, and other public safety departments. Public agencies have been brought into active relationships and responsibilities in all phases of emergency management.

"Durham has been a forerunner in many areas related to emergency management," said Stanley. "The best example I can give is the Durham Hazardous Materials Or-

'We're Smellin' Like A Rose,' Says Redwine

BY MARJORIE MEGIVERN

A substitute bill from the House Finance Committee that passed its second reading Monday night in the full House gets Brunswick County off the hook in the low-level radioactive waste controversy.

Rep. David Redwine said jubilantly, "We came out smelling like a

House Bill 35, considered earlier by the committee, would have required counties with nuclear plants to pay 25 percent of revenues derived from those plants to the county hosting a disposal site for low-level radioactive Scuttled in committee, HB 35 was replaced by a bill setting up an authority whose task would be to select a site in the state by Nov. 1, 1990. Also scuttled was the attempt to withdraw North Carolina from the eight-state compact that chose the Tar Heel state as the first host to radioactive waste.

"The authority has a timetable and criteria for choosing a site," Redwine explained. "This prompts us to begin the process and be ready for Barnwell closing in 1992." Barnwell, S.C. has been the disposal site for this kind of waste, but is approaching capacity.

With the substitute for HB 35, the last threat appears to have been removed that Brunswick County could become the regional site. An earlier move by Rep. Joe Mavretic to focus on the three counties having nuclear plants as prospective hosts was also voted down.

Southport Marina

Another tangle for Redwine has been the request by the State Ports Authority for General Assembly approval of its sale of the Southport Marina to the City of Southport.

"There's a parliamentary problem with this," he said, "and I have no vehicle to get it passed. The bill deadline has passed and it takes a two-third vote to consider a new bill at this stage."

He said he hoped the State Ports Authority would withdraw its request and decide to sell the facility to

"They made a request for money that they were afraid would be jeopardized by their having sold this piece of property, but the request has been approved, so that's not a problem any longer," Redwine explain-

The Authority wanted to sell the marina to Southport for $500,000 over a 15-year-period, at eight percent in-

"Since there's 19 years left on its lease (to an individual in Southport), Southport can use the lease money as a purchase price," Redwine added.

Shag And Pork

The legislator's famous "shag" bill, making this popular dance the official state dance, won't make it into law in this session. Redwine said the House has just not had time to deal with it. "People in the west weren't keen on it, anyway, because of the clog," he said.

A dozen organizations or agencies in Brunswick County will be happy over their share of Redwine's "pork barrel" of $40,000. Aside from monies given to Pender and New Hanover counties, the remainder of that will be directed as follows:

•$5,000 to Hope Harbor Home for abused women and children;

•$4,000 each to the Fourth of July and Oyster festivals and to the Old Baldy lighthouse renovation project;

•$2,000 each to the Brunswick Literacy Council, West, South and North Brunswick high school booster clubs, the Leland Civic Center, and the Leland Friends of the Library;

•$1,000 to Brunswick County's National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).

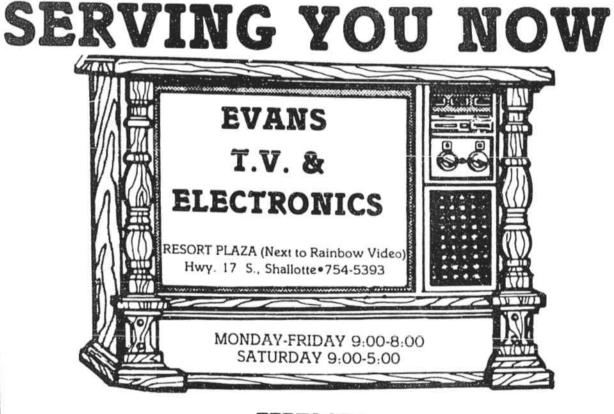

Redwine expected adjournment of the General Assembly by mid-week.
