VISION AND CLASSROOM PERFORMANCE

A child's ability to see and to use vision skills effectively can relate to his or her classroom performance. Concerned parents and educators recognize the importance of vision as a factor in the progress and well-being of the developing youngster. In spite of this, there are many children who fall behind in school because of undetected vision problems.

The observant parent or teacher is in an excellent position to pick up any symptoms or vision problems in a young child. If these exist, a thorough eye examination may be in order.

Many schools and parent-teacher groups conduct valuable preventive vision screening programs. However, these screenings should not be confused with a thorough vision examination by a doctor of optometry.

The typical school eye chart is designed to be seen at 20 feet and measures how well or poorly the child sees at that distance. Problems with near vision, eye coordination and focusing ability are among the many problems that may not be discovered in this test.
