Commissioners Request County ABC Referendum

BY RAHN ADAMS

Brunswick County residents this November will have their second chance in eight years to decide on alcohol sales in unincorporated areas, as commissioners Monday night called unanimously for a county-wide ABC referendum.

The referendum will be held on Nov. 7—the same day voters will go to the polls in municipal elections. The motion for the referendum was made by Commission Chairman Frankie Rabon, after a two-hour executive session to discuss other matters (see related story). All five commissioners were present. Benny Ludlum was the only commissioner to comment on the issue before the vote.

"I wish I'd heard about it before tonight, Mr. Rabon," Ludlum said of the chairman's motion. Ludlum did not speak when the vote was taken; however, his silence counted as an affirmative vote.

Rabon's motion specified that the referendum would determine whether or not to permit the following in unincorporated areas: on- and off-premises sale of malt beverages; on- and off-premises sale of unfortified wines; the operation of ABC stores; and the sale of mixed beverages in hotels, restaurants, private clubs, community theaters and convention centers.

Alcohol sales of one sort or another are legal now in most of the county's municipalities. Also, "sports clubs" in unincorporated sections of Brunswick County can obtain ABC permits, as a result of legislation sponsored two years ago by State Rep. E. David Redwine.

After Monday's meeting, Rabon said he initiated the board's action as a result of input from groups in his district and the Southport area. In March, a representative of "small business owners" in the county urged commissioners to seek a county-wide ABC vote. Also, State Rep. E. David Redwine told the board in January that it should consider requesting a referendum.

"I'm not saying they do need it (alcohol sales in the county)," Rabon told reporters. "Why not let the people decide? ... I'm going to let the people decide."

In September 1981, a majority of county voters decided against on- and off-premises beer and wine sales. There were four questions on the ballot: whether to not to permit on- and off-premises beer sales; on- and off-premises wine sales; and just off-premises sales of both beverages.

All four issues were defeated, with the narrowest margin being about 500 votes. Only six of the county's 20 voting precincts then voted passage of any of the four questions. Those precincts were Belville, Hood Creek, Oak Island, Southport I and II, and Shingletree.

County Elections Supervisor Lynda Britt told the Beacon Tuesday that the only potential problem with holding the ABC referendum in conjunction with municipal elections is that county and municipal polling places are different in many cases. She said local elections officials probably will ask for direction from the state elections board on how to handle the situation.

Ms. Britt added that the county would not be faced with the same problem encountered last November by the Town of Shallotte, whose ABC referendum was nullified because it was held in conjunction with a general election. According to state law, ABC votes can be held along with general elections only in odd-numbered years.

A Real 'Dog' Day Afternoon

Aaron Seay, son of West Brunswick High School head football coach Marshall Seay, tries to coax his Golden Retriever puppy, Gigi, out of the shadow cast by a line of Trojan players during a team photograph session Saturday on the high school stadium field. The dog found out that he didn't have it "made in the shade" after all and had to endure the hot afternoon sun like everyone else.

Shalotte Residents Seek Board's Help In Blocking Group Homes

BY DOUG RUTTER

Though a concerned group of residents opposing construction of two more group homes for mentally retarded adults in Shallotte wants the town's help in blocking those proposed facilities, there may be nothing town officials can do to prevent their locating here.

Developer Eddie Droughan of Dunn has proposed building group homes at 128 Pine Street and 116 Pender Road in Shallotte. The local homes, as well as nine others proposed in surrounding counties, would be leased and operated on a for-profit basis by LifeSkills Inc., also based in Dunn.

At last Wednesday's regular town meeting, a half dozen residents from Pine Street and Al Street requested the town board's assistance in blocking the proposed group homes. Some of the audience members had attended a public hearing the day before in Lumberton held as part of the state's certificate of need process.

A decision on whether to issue certificates of need, which would allow construction of the intermediate care facilities for the mentally retarded, will be made before the end of October and could be made as soon as mid-September, according to Terri Muchmore. The project analyst with the state Division of Facility Services chaired last week's hearing.

Joe Hewett, who lives on Pine Street, said last week he and five other town residents went to the public hearing to oppose the proposed group homes. He came to last week's town meeting seeking the support of town officials.

"We want you to jump on the bandwagon with us and help us keep them out of here because we don't think they're needed on any street in Shallotte," he told the board.

Aldermen agreed to look into what the town could do to keep the group homes from locating in Shallotte. One proposal was to limit the number of unrelated persons living in one dwelling.

But there are no zoning restrictions or other measures the town can take to prevent the homes from locating in town, according to Shalotte attorney Rex Gore, chairman of Southeastern Mental Health's board of directors. Others in the mental health field agree that state law is on the side of the developers and that the town cannot pass laws to prevent the construction of group homes.

Gore said the agency proposing to manage the two facilities, LifeSkills Inc., had earlier requested a letter of support from the Southeastern Mental Health board, but nothing was approved. He said the board did not have statistics and other information needed to judge whether or not there is a need for one or two more group homes, and therefore, has taken no stance on the proposal.

Southeastern Mental Health (SMH) recently started construction of a group home for mentally retarded adults on John Street. The two other homes proposed in town would be slightly different than the home being built on John Street, according to Claire Emerson, director of the developmental disabilities programs for SMH.

Ms. Emerson said the adults who would live in the proposed homes would have developmental disabilities and, generally speaking, would be slightly less functional than those who will live at the John Street home. She added, however, that none of the people will be mentally ill or pose a threat to neighbors.

"I'm sorry that group homes are felt to be a menace because very nice people live in them," she said. "If the residents would take the time to visit a group home somewhere else they would see that there is nothing to fear."

The homes proposed for Pine Street and Pender Road would also be operated for a profit, while the home on John Street will be run as a non-profit facility.

Rhett Raynor, vice president of LifeSkills Inc. which formed last spring, said the state limits the amount of profit the agency can earn. If the homes are approved and built, he said the corporation would earn a profit of $1 per patient per day, or $2,190 per year with six clients in the home.

Funding for the proposed homes would come in part through state and federal grants, he said, and the homes themselves will be worth about $200,000 each.

Raynor said the Town of Shallotte was chosen because it is a growing community that offers services such as doctors, lawyers and shopping centers. Also, the town is close to The Brunswick Hospital and Brunswick Community College, where some clients will attend classes offered through the interagency program.

He said the agency examined approximately eight sites in town and chose the lots on Pine Street and Pender Road because they are good building sites and are situated in established residential neighborhoods.

"There is a tremendous need in Brunswick County and this is a tremendous opportunity to care for the mentally retarded people in Brunswick County," said Raynor. "The group homes allow for special care of mentally retarded adults without taking them far away from their families and putting them in institutions." (See RESIDENTS, Page 2-A)

Municipal Candidates Flock To Bolivia As Filing Period Closes

BY DOUG RUTTER

A wave of hopefuls flocked to the county government center in Bolivia last Friday before the close of the municipal filing period to bring the total number of candidates for town office this fall over the 100 mark.

Twenty-six of the 109 candidates for municipal office, sanitary district board and hospital board of trustees filed last Friday morning prior to the noon deadline, according to Brunswick County Board of Elections Supervisor Lynda Britt.

She said more people have filed for office this year than ever before. Mrs. Britt attributed the high number of candidates, in part, to the two new towns of Varnamtown and Sandy Creek, which will be holding their first municipal elections in November.

There are three candidates for mayor and eight for alderman in Varnamtown, while Sandy Creek has eight persons vying for the five seats up for grabs this year on the town council.

Other Brunswick County municipalities with lots of candidates from which to choose include Holden Beach, with eleven candidates for the five seats on the board of commissioners, and Southport, with 15 candidates for alderman and two seeking the mayor's post.

Holden Beach Mayor John Tandy, who will face no opposition in his bid for re-election, said last week he expects a good race for the board of commissioners.

"I am kind of proud of the fact that we have that many running," he said. "The people have got a choice. There's no doubt about that."

In contrast to the last municipal elections in 1987, every municipality in the county has enough candidates this year to fill the available seats.

And, at Ocean Isle Beach, three incumbents face no challengers in their bid for re-election.

Other municipalities where candidates will apparently face no opposition this fall are Belville and Navassa in northwestern Brunswick County. Also, there are five candidates for the five seats open on the Leland Sanitary District Board and three persons seeking the three seats up for election this year on the Doshier Hospital Board of Trustees.

There was no filing period in Calabash. There will be an emergency filing period depending on the outcome of an Aug. 22 referendum concerning the proposed consolidation of the town and the neighboring community of Carolina Shores.

Here's a list of the candidates for the 1989 fall elections in Brunswick County. An (I) following a name means the candidate is an incumbent.
