Agricultural Extension Agent Is Honored

During a two-day seminar in Pinehurst in January, Barrow was among 36 workers who received plaques for their participation in the North Carolina Agriculture in the World Program.

During the seminar, county directors, agricultural agents, specialists and administrators developed ideas and plans for educational programs for agricultural producers, agribusiness and others in North Carolina. They also looked back on a two-week intensive study trip they took to Western Europe, as well as the 12 days they spent in seminars dealing with domestic and international economic, trade and farm policies.

Barrow has worked for the county extension service since 1984. He has degrees from North Carolina State University and the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

A Feb. 17 exposition in Wilmington is aimed at creating teacher and public awareness of how the classroom can be extended by tapping community resources across Southeastern North Carolina.

Also, sessions will introduce teachers to ways of linking "object-oriented" teaching with classroom studies in art, history, science and language arts.

This Community Classroom, developed for the second consecutive year in cooperation with the Smithsonian Institution, will be open to the public from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Coastline Convention Center in downtown Wilmington. Featured will be exhibits from Brunswick, Bladen, New Hanover, Pender, Onslow and Duplin counties, from the USS North Carolina Battleship Memorial to Earth Day 1990. Admission is free. Teachers can earn certificate renewal credit through their participation.

Educators will participate in their choice of more than 20 workshops and mini-sessions offered at the convention center and at Cape Fear Community College. The programs will feature presentations by various museums, historic sites, natural parks and aquaria, including one by Clare Cuddy, regional workshop coordinator for the Smithsonian.

Dale Van Horn, operations manager of WQDR-FM in Raleigh will be guest speaker.
