It Helps To Walk Along The Shore

BY BILL FAVER

Being along the shore gives us some time to ponder some meanings and do some thinking and some sorting out of priorities.

FAVER

Choosing such a place away from the routines of our everyday life and focusing our activities on simpler ways of living can sometimes allow us to refine our thoughts.

We can make life-changing decisions with a clearer mind and a more objective approach. We can see the night sky and the great galaxies and wonder about who we are and where we fit in the universe. We can see the birds and the shells and the sunlit ocean waters and know the inter-relationships and inter-dependencies of life on earth.

We can write or read or sing without the usual distractions that muddy our thoughts. We can search and seek and create. We can feel good and secure and special.

A good many years ago, I watched a special child walking along the beach as she thought about going to college and these thoughts came to my mind:

I saw you walk along the shore today—searching. Were you searching for shells, or sharks teeth, or driftwood, or tiny bits of glass ground down by the sea?

Or, were you searching for yourself? Seeking to know, "Who am I?" And asking some "Whys" and "Why not?" about life...

I've been there, too...searching, and probing, and changing...and asking "why" and "why not."

It helps to walk along the shore some days and listen to the everchanging yet changeless sea. And feel the wind. And see the mysteries of living and dying... Promise me you'll never stop searching, and probing, and asking...
