Redwine Wins

me," the Shallotte attorney and Columbus County native indicated Tuesday night.

Barring victory by a write-in candidate in November, incumbent 13th District Judge David Wall will keep his district court judgeship for another four years. Wall captured the primary with 13,350 votes to Wayne Long's 9,120. Long carried only his home county of Brunswick, with 4,149 votes to Wall's 2,557 votes.

In the District 2 Commissioners Democratic primary, Joe Stevenson emerged with 2,879 ballots, or 42 percent of the vote based on unofficial tallies Tuesday, avoiding a possible second primary with Alfonza Roach, who finished second in the three-man field. On his third time out as a candidate for countywide office, the win gives Stevenson his second opportunity in the general election. Along with hard work, a well-organized campaign and dedicated workers, Stevenson credited his win in part to a new rule that allows a primary candidate to win with 40 percent of the vote rather than 50 percent. "Without it there would have been a run-off," he said.

In the Republican District 2 commissioner's primary, Shallotte Mayor Jerry Jones squeaked to victory with 1,262 votes to Eugene Hewitt's 1,097 votes.

The 40 percent rule that helped Stevenson also cleared the way for primary wins for two other Democratic candidates: incumbent District 5 Commissioner Grace Beasley of Leland, who captured 46.4 percent of the vote in her three-person race; and District 2 Board of Education candidate Polly Russ of Shallotte. She led with 45.3 percent of the vote in her race with Joe Carter and incumbent school board Chairman Dorothy Worth. Russ pulled in 3,100 votes and Carter 2,818. Worth trailed well behind with 915 votes.

In the Republican primary, James Brown of Southport said he surprised himself with his handy win of the sheriff's nomination with 1,203 votes. Brown captured 19 of 22 precincts in a crowded five-man field. His nearest challenger, David Gause of Shallotte, garnered 588 votes. Brown will face incumbent Sheriff John C. Davis in November. Davis won his primary 5,649 votes to Jim Vaughan's 1,432.

"I worked for every one of them (votes) and for some I didn't get," said Brown after the results were in. He credited his strong showing with a campaign in which he said, "I presented myself well and let the people know what I stood for. I didn't try to make myself into something I wasn't. I'm more of a doer than a talker."

Other Results Incomplete

With 94 percent of all precincts statewide reporting at 11:30 p.m. Tuesday, Southport resident Michael Easley was positioned to possibly call for a second primary with top vote-getter Harvey Gantt of Charlotte.

With 38 percent of the vote, Gantt appeared just short of the 40 percent needed to ensure the Democratic nomination in the U.S. Senate race. Easley had captured 30 percent of the vote, followed by John Ingram with 17 percent and "Bo" Thomas with 12 percent.

Statewide results were not available for the GOP U.S. Senate primary. However, in Brunswick County Jesse Helms captured 2,037 votes, while L.C. Nixon and George Wimbish received 273 and 212 votes respectively.

In the 7th Congressional District GOP primary, Brunswick County returns showed Robert Anderson of Fayetteville leading, 1,378 to 832 votes for Fries Shaffner. Results from other counties in the district were not available.

Ulrich Resigns As Manager At Holden

done require more working time than he would like to spend.

Ulrich said he works more than 40 hours a week and that the job has been "much more absorbing than I anticipated when I came here."

"I have a large number of personal things that have gone undone and the prospects of getting around to them appear dim as long as I'm employed here," he said.

Ulrich, who was town manager of Garner for 17 years, started working as town administrator of Holden Beach Jan. 9, 1989. He was earning an annual salary of $32,500.

Ulrich became the first town manager of Holden Beach in May 1989 when voters of the island community overwhelmingly passed a referendum changing the town's form of government from a mayor/council format to council/manager format. Town managers have more authority than administrators and can hire and fire town employees.

Ulrich said he doesn't have another job lined up, but added that he and his wife would like to remain at Holden Beach, where they own a home. Ulrich said he likes the community, but finds it difficult to enjoy the surroundings and work as town manager at the same time.

Normal Weather Is Expected

Residents of the South Brunswick Islands should see normal temperatures and rainfall over the next few days, following a week in which the average temperature was slightly above normal, according to Shallotte Point meteorologist Jackson Canady.

The average daily temperature during the period May 1-7 was 71 degrees, which Canady said is 2 degrees above normal. The daily average high was 81 degrees, and the daily average low was 61 degrees.

The maximum high temperature during the period was 87 degrees May 2, and the minimum low temperature was 49 degrees May 7, Canady said.

The meteorologist said he measured .99 inches of rainfall at his weather station during the period.

Canady said the outlook for the next few days is for temperatures and rainfall to be near normal. Temperatures should range from 60 degrees at night to 80 degrees during the day, and one-half inch of rainfall is expected.

Ocean Isle Adopts New Permit Fees For Commercial Buildings

BY SUSAN USHER

A new commercial building permit rate adopted by Ocean Isle Beach Commissioners Tuesday uses a sliding-scale fee that takes into account "economies of scale."

The fee schedule, which was recommended by the town's Planning and Zoning Board, was adopted unanimously with minimal discussion at the board's regular meeting Tuesday morning. All commissioners were present except Debbie Fox.

The new commercial fee scale completes the revamping of the town's building permit schedule. In April, commissioners approved a schedule of fees for use in the town's new extraterritorial zone, only to learn that the rates must be identical within the new zoning area and the town. At a May 1 meeting, commissioners adopted a new schedule for all residential housing, based on the type of development and construction cost, and asked the Planning Board to come back with recommendations for commercial construction permit fees.

Under the schedule approved Tuesday, the fee for a 10,000-square-foot commercial building permit is now $2,240, based on multiplying the estimated construction cost by eight-tenths of a cent.

The construction cost for the first 1,000 square feet would be calculated at $45 per square foot; the second 1,000 square feet at $35 per square foot; and additional area at $25 per square foot.

"The Planning Board felt this would be fair to all concerned," said Bill Bullington, chairman of the Planning and Zoning Board.

Bullington also had an answer for concerns raised at earlier meetings regarding the town's rates being higher than those charged by Brunswick County. "We provide better service than the county and county fees are subsidized by your taxes," he said.

Building Inspector Druied Roberson said the schedule recognizes "economies of scale" that come into play with larger structures and also eliminates a possible loophole in which someone could construct a building as an office, then after its completion, pay a $25 transfer fee and change its use to single-family residential.

Maps Are Available

Mayor Betty Williamson indicated property owners have approximately 60 days in which to question or appeal new flood insurance rate maps completed as part of a study by the National Flood Insurance Program and slated for consideration by the board following public hearings later this year.

The maps take into account such factors as dune erosion, storm surge and other flood elevation factors and are used for flood insurance and floodplain management purposes. Insurance agents use the map zones and base flood elevations in conjunction with information on structures and their contents to assign premium rates for flood insurance policies.

Roberson said he doesn't think the changes in base flood elevations indicated on the map will have much noticeable effect on the island, where zoning ordinances already require that the finished floor of a structure be located eight feet off the ground. However, with the new elevations, homes built at that height may no longer qualify for a flood insurance premium discount clude regulation of jet skis.

However, Ocean Isle Beach commissioners chose not to join with Caswell Beach, the Village of Bald Head and portions of Brunswick County in seeking designation as a sea turtle sanctuary, which would allow charges to be filed against individuals who harm loggerhead turtles or their nests.

"We'd better not get involved with the turtles," said Odell Williamson, water and sewer commissioner.

Other Business

In other business, commissioners:

- Met behind closed doors for 18 minutes in an executive session called to discuss a "personnel" matter. Afterward, Mayor Betty Williamson said no action was taken, but that the board had given its attorney further instructions regarding a request for inclusion in legislation to be introduced by Redwine during the General Assembly's short summer session.
- Voted to pay $600 dues for membership in the Cape Fear Council of Governments, up from $500 the past four years.
- Heard from Mayor Williamson that bids for sidewalk construction were to be opened at 9 a.m. today (Thursday) at the town hall.
- Authorized the mayor to contact Brunswick Electric Membership Corp. and Vision Cable regarding scheduling of the town's underground wiring project to begin this fall. The project was to have begun last fall, but was interrupted by Hurricane Hugo.
- Obtained permission from
