Community Leaders Adopt Readers At Middle School

come an adoption agency.

However, no babies are involved and no parenting expected. Instead, an adult volunteer who participates adopts a student from the school as a reading partner, purchases an appropriate book for that student to read and spends a total of an hour with that young person in the school on two separate visits.

Part of the Chapter I reading program led by Barbara J. Holcombe and Dayna Raines Sanders, this project recruited more than a dozen Brunswick County leaders, including N.C. Rep. David Redwine, District Judge Poli Barefoot and District Attorney Rex Gore, along with several business executives and others who hold responsible posi-

> Several related activities can accompany this shared reading. The school encourages recognition by teachers in the form of certificates. ribbons or other awards for a designated number of books read. Any class in which 100 books were read was treated to an ice cream party by Principal Mark Owens.

> Rex Gore instigated his own reward activity. He presented the book Counting on Frank to Alyxandra Kuigre, his student reader, and left with Alyxandra a bag of candy with a $5 bill attached. Since the book was about counting, the student was to guess the number of candies in the bag. For a correct guess and two books read by a certain date, Alyxandra got to keep the $5.

> The purpose of the program is to improve reading ability and develop an understanding of why reading is important to become responsible citizens in the society.

To Work As Intern

Rommyn Skipper of Leland was one of 51 college students selected by a nonprofit foundation to work as copy editing interns at daily newspapers or news services this summer.

Skipper was chosen from a group of 715 applicants by a panel of journalism professors and professional newspaper editors. After a two-week training course in copy editing, libel law and press ethics, Skipper will work as an intern at the Richmond Times-Dispatch in Richmond, Va.

A senior at Brigham Young University, Skipper is the son of Dyion and Carolynn Skipper.

The program is sponsored by the Dow Jones Newspaper Fund, a foundation supported by the Dow Jones Foundation and other newspaper companies to encourage young people to consider journalism ca-

Watch Group To Honor Students

The Brunswick County Community Watch Association will honor four outstanding students during their school's awards day programs this month.

An eighth grader at Waccamaw Elementary, Shallotte Middle, South Brunswick Middle and Leland Middle school will each receive a trophy and $50 savings bond for exhibiting the traits and characteristics of good citizenship, said Sheriff's Deputy Don Gates of Brunswick County Community Watch.

Winning students will be chosen by faculty members at each school, said Gates. The Association will sponsor the awards each year, he said.

Project Makes Math Fun

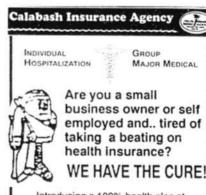

The math team at Lincoln Primary School set out to prove how much fun math could be with a recent Math Activities Day. A variety of games and projects were planned for each grade level.

Kindergartners and first grade students measured with sand, rice and beans and graphed with planes, cars and other objects. They also used pattern blocks to fill hexagons and played a special version of Brainy Bingo. Parent volunteers supervised each center.

Second graders displayed considerable excitement as they weighed, estimated and worked with tangrams and rolled color cubes for probabili-

Third graders learned about measuring and estimating meters and kilometers by competing in six unusual metric "Math Olympics" activities. Paper airplanes sailed through the air, but kids weren't "goofing off." The flights constituted a learning opportunity to estimate how far the planes would fly, then measure with a meter stick to check the predictions.

As first grader Adam Watson put it, "Math is fun when things like that
