

Work

Just before he was to take his wife and himself into Amazon country, William LaVarre visited the American Museum of Natural History. There, for a few moments, he held in his hand the great Venklers uncut diamond which, as you may know, weighs 700 carats.

Diamonds have a peculiar effect on those who hunt them, said Mr. LaVarre, on board the Van Rensselaer just before it started on its long voyage to Paramaribo, which will be the LaVarre headquarters. Those who find precious metals look on them simply as money.

To the people of the bush, Mr. LaVarre will tell of having handled the greatest diamond in the world. He will explain its size and weight and how it felt to hold it in his hand.

VERIFIES ROAD MAP OF ROMAN BRITAIN

Museum Employee Superimposes It on Modern One.

London.—The bright idea of an assistant in the cartographical department of the British museum is responsible for one of the most important discoveries in regard to the Roman occupation of Britain ever made.

Only about 200 miles of the roads built by the Romans have so far been uncovered. It is now possible to plot their entire system of several thousand miles. Moreover, it is revealed that many rural roads which were supposed to have been evolved from cattle paths have in reality a Roman foundation.

The discovery was made in this way: A set of ordnance survey maps showing, among other things, all modern roads, streets, lanes and paths had been received at the cartographical department for filing.

Verifies by Digging. The clerk made a map of this on the same scale as the other and superimposed it. In many cases the Roman roads covered the modern for a certain distance but only where the latter were straight or crossed each other at right angles.

Then the young man went digging. Under the surface of a few modern roads he found the remains of the Roman; in digging in fields where a continuation of the Roman road was indicated, he found it.

This map reveals the two clues which he followed: first, that all the modern local roads for miles leave Ermine street at right angles to its course—an unusual thing in regard to the "rolling English road," which usually seeks a path of least resistance; second, that south of Lincoln the principal roads opposite Earnston, Coleby, Boothby, etc., leave Ermine street and run due east, and after a mile or so of straight running meet a partly uncovered Roman road running parallel to it. He continues:

For definite purpose. "Beyond all doubt these roads were laid out by one authority for some definite purpose. They differ in every way from our normal English roads, which go with certain flexibilities from one village to another.

No one doubts that Lincoln was a Roman city and a Roman gate remains to this day. But no one has yet suggested that all this strange chess-board area north and south of the city bears an imprint in roads and parish boundaries which can only be that of the colony of 1,800 years ago.
