Dry Storage Keeps Seed Corn Fertile

Seed corn should be stored in a dry, well ventilated place over the winter if it is to produce a good yield of high quality corn the following season.

Carelessly stored seed may so deteriorate during the winter that it cannot produce a good stand of corn, warns P. H. Kime, plant breeding agronomist at State College.

The ears of seed corn should not be thrown together in a pile, he added, but should be stored in such a manner that the air can circulate freely about each ear.

Given a chance to dry out thoroughly before cold weather, the seed will be able to withstand heavy freezes without injury.

Kime pointed out that a satisfactory hanger can be made with wove wire and a couple two-by-four uprights. The meshes of the wire should be just large enough to permit the ears to pass through easily.

The uprights should be erected convenient distance apart, with the broad edges set at right angles to a line drawn between the two posts.

Place a length of the woven wire on each side of the uprights in such a manner that the complete rack resembles a double woven wire fence, with the meshes opposite and four inches apart.

The ears of seed corn can then be stuck through the meshes of both wires, where they will remain until ready for sowing.

Sometimes it is advisable to warm the storage room at first to facilitate the curing process, Kime stated, but be careful not to raise the temperature above that of a comfortable living room, as too much heat will impair the germination power of the seed.

Few Cotton Tenants Forced Leave Land

Fewer than one percent of the tenants on cotton farms have been turned off their land, or lowered in status, in violation of cotton adjustment contracts.

This was the finding of a survey conducted in 52 representative counties of 11 cotton states, said Dean I. O. Schaub, of State College.

The survey also showed that under the program more tenants have been able to rent land for farming than before. This year there were 14.8 percent more cotton tenants than in 1932.

More than two-thirds of the tenants were allowed to produce food and feed crops for themselves on fields withdrawn from cotton cultivation, the dean added.

The survey, conducted by the AAA in cooperation with relief agencies, is one of the most comprehensive studies made of the tenancy situation, the dean continued.

"The survey shows, definitely that
