

Durham Man After Josiah Bailey's Scalp

The North Carolina senatorial race has gained new impetus with the announcement of David L. Strain, of Durham, that he will "vigorously oppose" Josiah W. Bailey in the June Democratic primary.

"For two months friends everywhere in the State have urged me to oppose Mr. Bailey," said the Durham man. "It is patent that a change is desired, and I intend to wage an aggressive campaign for the nomination." Mr. Strain is 47 years of age and a war veteran widely known in North Carolina.

"It is clearly apparent," he added, "that the people in the common walks of life in this State desire representation in the senate by a man whose interests rest with their own, a man with whom they can maintain the contact which they justly deserve."

"I am interested in an expanded program of public works which will assure the wise and useful expenditure of money on projects of lasting value and which at the same time will provide an equitable, living wage for those who are thus given employment."

"To illustrate—I should advocate in such a program proper attention to the need for public housing requirements, the elimination of traffic hazards, the construction of needed public buildings, the rehabilitation of roads, the elimination of insanitary conditions, and the propagation of the fish and oyster industry along our coast."

"I favor immediate payment of the adjusted compensation certificates, and I am also interested in a plan of sufficient scope to provide real social security for our aged and unemployed dependents."

"MOONSHINE" GOOD FOR ONE THING, AT LEAST

Hillsboro, N. C., Jan. 16.—"Moonshine" or contraband corn liquor is saving money to the tax payers of Orange County by being used as the anti-freeze solution in county-owned tractors, reports Assistant County Agent Edwin S. Barner. Fifteen gallons of this confiscated liquor was used by the sheriff last week and has not only saved time in draining and refilling the motor radiators each day, but has proven just as effective as the high priced solutions, Barnes reports.
