ROMEO ABOARD A BURRO

THE chief actors may be getting a kick out of this balcony act, but the burro is bored and headed for home. Scenes like this lend endless charm to the delightful city of Arequipa, which rests 7,500 feet above sea level in a fantastic mountain setting highlighted by three famous peaks—Pichu Pichu, Chachani, and the perfectly formed El Misti.

Arequipa is approached by rail from Mollendo, port visited by the weekly cruises from New York to Peru. The rail route leads through the Desert of Inlay, noted for its creeping crescent-shaped sand dunes—phenomena encountered nowhere else in the world. The city which today is the second largest in Peru was originally a resting place for Indian runners who covered the trail between Cuzco, capital of the Incas, and the coast. Later, when Pizarro discovered in it an excellent location for a Spanish stronghold, the city was made the seat of a bishop and adorned with the beautiful Spanish edifices which lend so much character to the city today. Most of the buildings are constructed of "sillar" or petrified lava, a pure white material strikingly set off by the profuse foliage and flowers which bloom throughout the year in Arequipa.

Records Help Growers Qualify For Payments

Farmers participating in the new farm program need to keep records of the soil-conserving crops they grow and the soil-building practices they carry out.

The records will be a means of proving they are entitled to soil-building payments, said Dean I. O. Schaub, director of the State College extension service.

He pointed out that it is particularly important that farmers keep records showing the acreage of green manure crops grown and the date they are turned under.

They should also keep receipts showing purchases of ground limestone or superphosphate applied to the soil as a soil-building practice.

As a further means of proof, the dean suggested that farmers notify their local committeemen, or their county agent's office whenever they carry out soil-building practices.

The notification does not have to be in writing, he continued. The important thing is to inform the committeemen.

Then in checking up on a grower's compliance, the committeemen will take note of the practices carried out and give the farmer credit for them.

Before a producer can qualify for the payments, the dean emphasized, he will be required to submit proof of the soil-building practices he has followed.

This is why it is important to keep records, and notify the committeemen of all such practices observed in connection with the new program.

Farm-Home Week Be Educational Vacation

The program for Farm and Home Week at State College, July 27-31, will present a representative cross section of agricultural activities in North Carolina.

It has been designed to show farmers and farm women not only what is going on in the State, but also the value of improvements that are being developed in all aspects of farming and rural life.

Farm people will find the trip to Farm and Home Week a good investment, said John W. Goodman, secretary of the week, inasmuch as they will have an opportunity to study better methods of doing things on the farm.

But that is only a part of the picture, he continued. Along with the educational features of the program will be a variety of entertainment and recreation that will make the week "a delightful vacation."

State and national agricultural leaders will lead discussions regarding all farm matters of current interest to men, and class room work in home demonstration activities will be given the women.

In addition, there will be joint meetings for men and women, at which the new farm program, rural electrification, farm cooperatives, 4-H club work, home demonstration work, farm organizations and agencies, and many other subjects will be discussed.

A number of farm organizations will hold their annual meetings at Farm and Home Week, and all organizations and agencies working with North Carolina farm people
