Chapter Five

John Randolph found a blackmake whip, and beating about him with superhuman energy, forced his way to the side of Andrew Jackson. Some of the men who fall Randolph's lash about their face decided they had had enough of combat. Others pressed forward in an attempt to keep Jackson from shouting instructions to those standing in the doorway of the Inn.

One of the mob lesders decided that the best way to break the morale of the defense would be to spirit Peggy away. He called a hunky colleague to his side, and silently the two advanced from behind as the girl stood in the shadow of the servants' lodge. With a scream, at the last minute, she saw them and pulled back. The men trached out to seize her, as she turned and slipped.

Heroic intervention came from an unexpected source. Bow Timberlake, wearing a white flannel shirt that he had hastly donned, looked from his second floor window, saw what was happening, and made a flying leap. He landed satride one of Peggy's assatiants, and, despetching him with a swift blow, whirled

The turning point of the fray was the appearance of Rachel Jackson at an upstalm window. Swinging bucket of boiling water with a practiced hand, she brought a resounding mean from her human targethelow. General Jackson looked up in "Cast wider, my lovel" he shouted. "Wider it is, Girrall" called back Rachel, registering a perfect bulleege with the second bucket.

A moment later the mob was in disorderly retreat. Hands protecting the backs of their burning necks, the attackers rushed for the front gate. Those who still lagged behind were quickly taken in hamby the home force.

"I thought you were salesp," she rejoined.
"I can't sleep," said Bow. "I'm thinking about something."
"What is it?"
"I was just wondering how you could possibly slap my face if I were to kiss you."
"I'd find a way," said Peggy.
"You mean you'd punish me for a little thing like that?"
"Yes," answered Peggy.
An unusually heavy blap of thunder sounded outside.
"Hear that?" said Bow. "That's my heart — asking you to marry me."
"Is it?" asked Peggy.
"Yes," said Bow, straining his head forward. "My lips have gone as far as they can, alone."
Peggy quivered. Hew wanted her love, and John Randolph didn't. If her first those were denied, why not take second best? In the darkness she strained forward, and the compact was sealed by a kiss.

Three Old Grads

There's nothing like a bevy of old grads to enliven Homecoming Day at a big university, and this rollicking trio, Charles Butterworth, Hugh Herbert and Walter Abel, does its share to make the new comedy hit, "We Went to College," an uproarious entertainment frolic at the Taylor Theatre, Edenton, Wednesday.

A change in the regulations, he added, now permits growers to meet their minimum conserving crop acreage requirements by sowing winter legumes on fields where depleting crops were harvested earlier in the

"Sanitary" Pigs Rate

Raising pigs in southeastern United States in accordance with scientific methods for parasite control is not only profitable but has attracted wide public interest.

An exhibit of eight litters reared under the parasite-free system was a feature of a recent livestock field day at the North Florida Experiment Station, Quincy, Fla. Of the eight litters, three were from a pubic school at Greensboro, where vocational agriculture is taught. The remaining five were raised by a 16year-old boy.

About three-fourths of the 63 pigs hundredweight on a day when the top price at the nearest market was $9.50. Most of the pigs were from 6 to 7 months old and weighed from 100 to 240 pounds. As reported to the Federal Bureau of Animal Industry, they were exceptionally well developed and uniform and gave evidence of good breeding, feeding, and freedom from the usual internal par-raised according to all provisions of swine sanitation which is directed in particular against roundworms and

The Georgia Experiment Station, at Tifton, has raised pigs under the sanitary system for six years and holds a field day each year. In Georgia a swine improvement committee has developed a complete program for better swine production which includes the care and feeding, of sows, balanced feeding, and control of cholera and internal parasites. The plan is being taken up by other Southeastern States.

Extend Time To Plant Soil-Conserving Crop

Winter legumes sown in October may be counted as soil-conserving crops under the 1936 soil-improvement program, according to J. F. Crieswell, of State College.

The time allowed for seeding conserving crops has been extended to October 31, since many farmers have been handicapped by dry weather, he explained.

He urged growers to take advantage of the time extension and sow enough conserving crops to qualify 7

This is the minimum amount of conserving crops a farmer must grow to participate in the soil-improvement program.

Conserving crops may also be grown for another purpose: to make a grower eligible to receive payment for carrying out soil-building prac-tices. When grown for this purpose, the conserving crop must not be placed on land where depleting crops have been raised this year.

Since the work of checking growin the eight litters brought $10.50 a the soil-improvement program has ers' compliance with provisions of been completed in most counties, Criswell stated, growers who seed conserving crops in October should report it to their county agents so they will get credit for the later
