"OFF WITH HIS EARS"

Why was Samuel Pricklove's ear cut off? And why did the court order him forever banished from Albemarle? That he was made to stand in the piliory, public place of shameful punishment that it was, for three hours, seems a minor detail in the light of the fact that he was ordered kept in irons until he could be transported.

It all happened back in the early days of Carolina, in the year 1680, when the scattered people in the colonies were governed by the King of England. It was only seventeen years after the region then known as Carolina had been granted to the Lords Proprietors, and some fifteen years after the small insolated area in the northeastern corner of the state was first called Albemarle County.

An old court record from the Chowan Precinct Court, dated 1680, reads, "ordered that Samuel Pricklove stand in the piliory three hours, and lose his right ear, and be banished this county for ever, and to live in prison without bayle in yrons, or otherwise, until he shall be shipped for his transport, and their aboard kept in yrons till at his place he be landed, with costs and fees".

And there the story ends, or does it? There is little to indicate what Samuel Pricklove's crime might have been on the surface, nothing in the court record. Neither does any history give an account of anything in the nature of a felony on the part of Samuel Pricklove. His name appears again and again in old records however.

In the first place, it is recited in the oldest deed of record in the state, the deed from the Indian Chief Kilococan to George Durant, dated in 1661, that the lands conveyed, located in Perquimans River, adjoined lands which the Indians had previously sold to Samuel Pricklove.

A great many things had transpired in the twenty years between the time when Samuel Pricklove arrived in Carolina, with the earliest of the settlers, and bought his plantation from the Indian King of the Yeopims and the date of the old court record, more than twenty years afterwards.

The land in Albemarle was fertile then, as now, and yielded quantities of tobacco, which was shipped to England for the most part, though there was considerable trading with the New England colonists. Tobacco was the one money crop. Tobacco was, in fact, to all intents and purposes, money. It was used in barter in place of money. So many pounds of tobacco was the consideration named in many of the old land transfers of that day. Of course, the tobacco crop was important. The tax which the English government levied on the tobacco exports was also important. In July of the year 1677 Thomas Miller returned to Albemarle from England, having been appointed collector of the customs under the new governor Thomas Eastchurch, who appears to have made a very leisurely sojourn at interesting points en route to take over his new duties as governor. Miller was pretty high handed in his methods of collecting the customs and assumed a great deal of authority. This resulted in the Culpepper Rebellion, that miniature war which flared up in 1677, and which the English courts later ruled was a riot and not a rebellion at all, John Culpepper, the leader, being cleared in London of the charge of high treason.

This outbreak in the Albemarle in 1677 was very similar to that on the continent a century later, which in the course of its progress developed into a victorious struggle for independence.

There was a period of some years following this Culpepper Rebellion when the colonists lived under their own government and ran things very much to the satisfaction of every one. They had a free parliament. Thomas Cullen was speaker, and among the members were John Jenkins, Alexander Lillington, Thomas Jarvis, Valentine Byrd, Patrick White, Henry Bonner, Richard Sanders and others.

It has been said of these men who assumed the reins of government and carried on the affairs of Albemarle at this time that, as neither the king's authority nor that of the proprietors was denied, the revolutionists did not regard themselves as being in rebellion, but that, while the revolutionists established courts and maintained order and otherwise looked after the functions of government, the customs were not collected with exactness nor with vigilance. And there was the rub.

There is a reference in Colonial Records to Samuel Pricklove which seems to shed some light. Timothy Biggs, a deputy under Thomas Miller, who was strenuously zealous in collecting the duties on tobacco, in writing from "My Office on Little River Point", under date of 1679, refers to Samuel Pricklove as "my deputy" and sets forth that "my deputy being on ye execution of ye aforesaid warrant was pursued and seized by ye grand marshal of ye county by order of ye aforesaid Robert Holden". Pricklove appears to have been on the wrong side, and it must have been in connection with his activities in the rebellion that led to the trial and sentence in 1680.

It is possible there were two men of the name of Samuel Pricklove, though as to this there is no way of knowing. But Samuel Pricklove was not banished forever from Albemarle,

The Church The Body Of Christ

By D. M. SHARPE
A great deal of our thinking concerning the church is that it is a group of men and women bound together in certain human relationships, and differing from other organizations in that the members have a consciousness of a common relationship to God, but still a company of men and women with needs like other men, who turn for sympathy and reinforcement to their fellow men.

The church of Christ has always been this, and more. It is more than fellowship of man with man; it is fellowship of man with God. Through the church God carries on the work which was started by Christ. What His body and presence were to the people with whom He walked in Galilee His disciples are to be to men and women down through the years.

We are to be lips to speak His message; feet to carry His gospel; eyes to see His opportunities; hands to do His work; shoulders to bear His cross, and hearts to thrill with His love. What each Christian is expected to do and be in his individual life, the church is expected to do and be as an organization of individuals. Paul tells us that the church is the body of Christ, and that we as members are a part of the body. What each one is as a Christian is to be a contribution to the body of Christ which is the church. The church is the organ through which the spirit of God works or functions in the world, and through it the world is prepared for His kingdom.

In spite of all the imperfections of the individual members, the church has made its power felt in the world. By it men and women conscious of sin and longing for forgiveness have found their way back to God. The church has been a light to many men in darkness and doubt. She has lifted many who were in despair. She has turned many weary feet into the path which leads back home. Many rejoice in the fact that they have a church, and they may have a part in leading the young life into the way of righteousness and truth. The church sets our young people in the way that leads to God. A building and equipment is not enough. We must realize that the church is the body of Christ, and that every member of the church is a part of that organic union with Christ who is the Head of the church. When you realize this, you will not be talking about being out with the church. You will be able to sing with the other members. You can then give and be happy in your giving to the Lord.

"I love Thy Kingdom Lord,
The house of Thine abode,
The church our best Redeemer
saved
With His own precious blood."
