Walnuts Turn Waste Space Into Profits

Black walnut trees, a good source of cash income, can be grown in fence corners, along ditch and stream banks, and other so-called "waste places" about the farm.

An average North Carolina farm could easily have 50 or more black walnut trees, said R. W. Graeber, extension forester at State College. The nuts from the trees can be harvested annually, and where a sufficient number of trees are produced, a few can be cut from time to time for timber.

There is big demand for black walnut lumber, Graeber pointed out, and high prices are paid for trees in good condition.

The income from the nuts is a helpful addition to the regular cash income of the farm. Figuring the nuts from one tree at $2.50 a year, a crop of 50 trees would produce an annual income of $125 from the sale of nuts alone.

Some farmers do much better than that, Graeber added, James Caudle, of Yadkin County, got $29.85 for the nuts from seven trees last year—an average of $4.26 per tree.

Caudle gathered 13 bushels of nuts from the trees and cracked 99.5 pounds of kernels which he sold wholesale at 30 cents a pound.

"This may not appear to be a large sum, but remember, it came from a bare handful of trees growing on odd spots around the farm," Graeber commented.

Four-H club members in Yadkin County who use a nut-cracking machine, he added, find that the machine greatly reduces the amount of work required to get the kernels out of the nuts, and they are making "tidy sums of money."

Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Chappell spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Rogerson.

Mr. and Mrs. Kramer Nixon of Taylors visited Mr. and Mrs. V. C. Lane Sunday afternoon.

This Explains An Idea That Increases Farm Profits

This illustration serves to prove that small quantities can make important changes under certain circumstances. A teaspoonful of soda in a barrel of water is insignificant. However, the same amount of soda in a half glass of water would make a big change.

Small quantities of acid in fertilizer cause a change in the pH of the few handfuls of soil that make up the root-zone of young plants. Often this change prevents the plant from making full use of the plant food in the fertilizer.

Only by using a fertilizer that is Physiologically Neutral can pH changes in the root-zone be prevented.

Swift's Red Steer Non-Acid Forming and Physiologically Neutral Fertilizers do not change the pH of root-zone soils. They prevent waste of plant food... that's why yields are bigger, quality finer, when crops are fertilized with this improved fertilizer.
