

Missionary Society "Pounds" Pastor

Rev. W. G. Lowe, Pastor of the Perquimans Charge of the M. E. Church South, was given a very beautiful pounding at the meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of Woodland Church, held at the home of Mrs. George Benton, with Mrs. Marvin Benton and Mrs. Carson Jordan as joint hostesses, recently.

Mrs. Marvin Benton, president, presided, and the program included a reading by Rev. Mr. Lowe, a meditation, "The Disciple always a missionary," by Mrs. Ernest Cartwright, a poem read by Mrs. Ralph Harrell, and closing with a very inspiring talk on the last two chapters of the mission study book, "The Congo Crosses."

At the close of the program and a short business session the minister was given a pounding of many and varied useful articles, after which delicious ice cream and cake were served.

Those present were Mesdames M. Benton, J. W. Everett, J. E. Wood, George Benton, Carson Jordan, George Jordan, J. W. Overton, Ralph Harrell, D. M. Cartwright, E. S. Lane, J. T. Benton, Jack Benton, Henry Cartwright, Odell Cartwright, J. H. Harrell, Moody Harrell, W. M. Matthews, Ernest Cartwright, Addie Harrell, Kermit Benton. Visitors included Mesdames Vernon Winslow, Hesse Harrell, Eunice Harrell, Lucille Cartwright; Misses Laura Cartwright, Beatrice Benton, Elinor Jordan, Stella Mae Benton, Mrs. Edward Benton and daughter, Barbara Anne, of White Hat; Rev. W. G. Lowe; Mrs. Elizabeth Overman, of Elizabeth City; Mrs. Mason Sawyer and daughter, Barbara Lee, of Old Neck; Lois Fay Benton, Carolyn Dean Harrell, Ronald Edward Harrell and Walter Ray Benton.

Feed And Cover For Wildlife Is Scarce

A bird in the hand may be worth two in the bush, but if there are not enough "bushes" to provide cover and food for wildlife, "we may not have any birds or other game in the bush," said H. J. Rush, biologist of the Soil Conservation Service.

Birds have rightfully been called "friends of the farmer." Birds ask little in return for the services they render, Rush said, yet they can be of considerable assistance in producing healthy clean crops, free from insects and noxious weeds.

With the exception of a relatively few game preserves, wildlife is confined to farm lands and depends on them for food, shelter, and nesting sites.

At practically no cost, and by devoting a small amount of his time to wildlife assistance, Rush pointed out, the farmer can make havens for wildlife on fields now idle and severely eroded.

Lespedeza provides good food and cover for quail. In cutting lespedeza Rush recommends that a small strip be left along the side of the field or, if possible, several strips throughout a large field.

The farmer may disk up a broom sedge field or any abandoned land, giving suitable wild plants a chance to grow. By allowing wild shrubs to grow along fence rows, field borders, and in pastures, the farmer is furnishing a permanent home for birds, Rush continued.

The farmer will receive three-fold dividends from his investments, since birds destroy harmful insects and certain noxious weeds; they are a source of pleasure in hunting and may provide a source of income for the farmer who leases hunting rights and they afford personal pleasure from growing a good crop of birds.

'Green Bugs' Infest Small Grain Fields

"If you find areas in your fields of small grain where the plants are turning yellow or dying, the trouble may be due to infestations of aphids or plant lice sometimes called 'green bugs'."

"These are small insects about the size of an ordinary pin head. They live on the grain over the winter and become active in the spring," said Dr. B. B. Fulton, entomologist at State College.

The damage they do is greatest in cool weather when the spring temperatures are between 50 and 65 degrees Fahrenheit, he continued.

"So far as we know now," he added, "there is little we can do to check these bugs except hope for warmer weather."

When the temperature goes above 65 degrees, a tiny wasp begins to multiply rapidly. The wasps sting the green bugs and lay eggs in their dead bodies.

The eggs hatch into grubs that produce more wasps which, in turn, sting more bugs to death and after a time the green bugs disappear from the field, Dr. Fulton pointed out.

Cool, wet weather this spring has been conducive to heavy infestations of green bugs, he continued, and in some places farmers report that entire fields are being damaged. Others report small areas damaged here and there in their fields, particularly those in which oats are growing.

As the weather warms up, however, the wasps may kill off the bugs before they do much more damage, Dr. Fulton added.
