Shows How AAA Aids In Conserving Soil
(Editor's note: This is the sixth in a series of articles in which two farmers discuss the agricultural conservation program.)
John Brown: "There are several ways in which the program will help you take better care of your land."
Bill Smith: "I'm glad of that."
Brown: "First, they offer you payments for carrying out soil-building practices. That will help you do things you felt you just couldn't afford to do before."
Smith: "I ain't had any money for nothing . . . for years. I know how it is."
"When prices go too high, we are tempted to plant all the cash crops we can so we will make money while the makin' is good. But this type of overcropping soon wears out the soil. And when we plant every available acre to cash crops, we are likely to produce too much. Then we have overproduction and prices fall again. Many growers are forced to lose their farms."
Smith: "I came near losing mine several times. It's tough, ain't it?"
Brown: "And when prices are real low, we feel that we've got to plant cash crops on every possible acre in order to eke out a living. This, too, means over production and wearing out the land, unless something is done about it."
"But when prices are kept at a fair level, we find it is easier to limit our acreage of cash crops. This leaves more land for soil-building crops. And when we are making a decent living, we can afford to do things that will conserve the land for the future."

STOP THE LEAKS
GUY A. CARDWELL,
General Agricultural Agent,
Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co.
Improved farm income is to some extent within the control of every farmer. Numbers of farmers are still making a comfortable living farming. A study of these cases will show that these successes have been made by men and women who have taken the time to make a close study of conditions, and who have applied skillful methods to farm operations.
I grant that farm life has become more complex, but this is also true of almost every occupation. In view of this, those farmers who succeed in keeping income in-line with the cost of living are compelled to apply their best efforts to the stoppage of leaks.
Among the leaks that can be stopped in some measure are insect pests and plant disease, both of which have gained a firm hold on the crops of this section.
There are chewing insects and sucking insects by the hundreds of thousands which parasitically feast on host crops. We should use the most effective poisons and economical methods in fighting to dialodge and destroy these robbers.
Plant diseases are also well entrenched and take their toll of both cash and subsistence crops.
Other leaks to be stopped will require close consideration of many things; among them: the careful savings and use of all manure produced on the place; the testing of seed for purity and germination; the selection and thorough preparation of the land in order that seed may have a fair chance of germination; farm drainage and crop rotation; fertilizer requirements with particular reference to the land and to the crops being grown; and after the crops are produced improvements should be made, if possible, in the harvesting methods used and in preparation of each crop for market.

Religious Rights Stressed at Fair
NEW YORK (Special)—A tribute to the constitutional right of freedom of worship will have a prominent part in the statutory to be placed upon the $50,000,000 Central Mall of the New York World's Fair 1939. Grover A. Whalen, president of the Fair corporation, announces.
Part of a group known as "The Four Freedoms" the statue will depict a chaste, young girl, her face raised to the skies, holding a prayerbook in her hands. On the base of the statue, a number of churches of various denominations will signify that freedom of religion in this country is not confined to any one sect or creed.

Co-op Swine Sales Yield $1,076,441
Cooperative hog shippers in North Carolina who guaranteed their pork to be hard received an estimated $30,000 more last year than they would have got if they had not given buyers this protection.
Buyers who run a risk of getting soft and oily pork due to the hogs feeding heavily on peanuts or soy beans, cannot offer the farmer as much for his animals, said H. W. Taylor, of State College.
Most of the hogs measured up to the guarantee, he continued, and deductions for the few soft and oily porkers found amounted to only 7-10 percent of the gross receipts.
During the year, he said, 47,640 hogs were shipped F. O. B. in cooperative shipments numbering 680 carloads. The total weight was 9,309,843 pounds, and the receipts were $932,453.94.
An additional 81 carloads containing 5,690 hogs were shipped cooperatively on consignment. They totaled 1,203,319 pounds and brought $113,982.07.
The cooperative shipments, sponsored by county farm agents, are made to help the farmers secure better prices on the big markets and to enable them to get lower transportation rates.
During the past year shipments were sent from New Bern, Tarboro, Burgum, Coftield, Elizabethtown, Fayetteville, Lumberton, Four Oaks, Greenville, Plymouth, Rowland, Shawboro, Warsaw, and Washington. In counties surrounding these sales points, the farmers have organized mutual or cooperative marketing associations with boards of directors composed entirely of those growers who sell on the market.

Electric Fences Keep Bears Out Of Apiaries
Bears, with their craving for honey—whether pawed from a wild "honey" tree or pilfered from a commercial hive—have long prevented much bee-keeping land in the mountains of the Pacific States from being used. These marauding brutes, it now appears, can be thwarted by putting electric fences around apiaries.
