ABOUT "HIRED HELP"
A colored girl, hired domestic servant, was tried and convicted in Recorder's Court this week on sundry charges, including drunk and disorderly. In his judgment, which included a jail sentence, the judge recommended that the girl, "be given a medical examination during her term in the jail."

The laws of North Carolina provide that all domestic employees, cooks, servants, etc., be given a clean bill of health by a competent physician before entering into such employment. Perquimans County's judge and other officials are all for enforcing that law but so long as employers do not require certificates of health from their "hired help," the officers' hands are tied.

MISSIONARY SOCIETIES MEET
Both the senior and junior Missionary Societies met Tuesday evening at Epworth Methodist Church in Winfall, with the junior Society entertaining the senior Society. The meeting was very interesting.

Those who hire servants to look after their children and prepare food. The Perquimans Weekly thinks, will do well to demand certificates of health from prospective employees before turning the safe-keeping (?) of their families over to hired people.
If all employers adopted such a procedure, those who hire out would soon find themselves unable to secure employment without a certificate of Health, and a grave danger would be overcome.
