

Perquimans Voters Seem Little Het Up In State Politics

Things Are Quiet on The Home Front Too; Indifference Is Outstanding Feature

With little activity on the home front, Perquimans County voters are showing little interest in politics these days. Indifference is noted along the political front, reports stating that the old-time political leaders are talking less and doing less in the interest of the candidates than at any time in recent years.

While there'll be a general distribution of the votes among the six candidates for governor, early reports place no one man as definitely holding an advantage at the present time.

Perquimans County folks are not slow to commit themselves, but they are open to more facts, and the strength the candidates poll in the various precincts depends upon a turn of events from now until the primary on May 25th.

None of the candidates have appeared here and none of them have made a strong impression on several persons questioned; that is, men in the street, not politicians.

Locally, the political field continues very quiet, but reports indicate there is something brewing. At least one local man is undecided about tossing in his hat for the first time for a seat in the house of representatives.

The general consensus of the political whirl at this time, is: "I've never seen politics so quiet this near the primary . . . and especially with so many candidates for governor."

Morris Reserves Boxes For Baseball Fans At Exhibition Game
