F. D. R.'S FOREIGN POLICY OK'D BY MR. WILLKIE AID TO THE BRITISH HELP FOR THE CHINESE NO APPEASEMENT NEUTRALITY ABANDONMENT THE RISK OF WAR BRITISH RESISTANCE

The reasonable presumption, in view of the re-election of President Roosevelt, is that the attention of the people of this country, during the next year or so, will be directed to problems connected with international affairs.

Domestic issues have receded somewhat to the background. This is not due solely to the declaration of the President that the era of reform is over, but also to the fact that Mr. Willkie, as the Republican candidate for President, pointedly accepted as "national policies" most of the basic reforms of the past few years.

The Republican nominee endorsed the policy of providing farmers with a fair share of the national income, the right of labor to collective bargaining under its free choice, the floor to wages and the limit to hours of labor and social security, including old-age pensions, care for the unemployed, Federal relief, care for the aged, the sick, the physically handicapped and the blind.

The attitude taken by Mr. Willkie during the campaign does not mean that these reforms will not face attack in the future. There will be ultra-conservative groups within both parties ready to sabotage them at any opportunity.

Mr. Willkie's position, however, indicates that opponents of these policies have lost their battle. Moreover, his stand will undoubtedly have considerable influence upon the Republican Party, as a whole, which will hardly commit the Party to an attitude which the leader is opposed to.

Insofar as the issues in the recent political campaign related to foreign affairs, it should be noted that, in this field, the position taken by the Republican nominee was closely allied to that espoused by President Roosevelt. Mr. Willkie endorsed greater assistance to Great Britain, the extension of aid to China and a policy of firmness, without appeasement, to the dictator-aggressor nations.

Consequently, it may be asserted, without any form of political partisanship, that the foreign policy of the Administration has the endorsement of the vast majority of the people of this country.

Of course, in this connection, there is a small minority, scattered through both parties, which opposes the foreign policy of the United States and which, seemingly, tends to support an appeasement program. While scattered advocates of "isolation" are still alive in the Republic the policy of isolation has been officially dropped by the leaders of both parties.

For many years after the World War, the United States was firmly committed to a policy of absolute neutrality, regardless of the issues which might produce a conflict between other powers. This policy also included drastic regulations designed to prevent the United States, or its citizens, from becoming involved in the exigencies of an emergency anywhere in the world. Moreover, lest the trade of this country become involved into assistance to one side or another, there were statutes to prevent such a development.

When the present war between Germany and Great Britain began, the idea of neutrality and isolation was still strong throughout the nation. As the war continued abroad, however, and became intertwined with the hostilities in the Far East, the sentiment of our people underwent a great change which was reflected in the policies of the Government.

Thus, today, the nation follows a policy of non-belligerency but not a policy of strict neutrality. As a nation, the sentiment of our people is overwhelmingly on the side of Great Britain and as a Government we extend every possible assistance, short of war, to enable the British to win their fight against the aggressors.

This policy, it should be remembered, is that of the present Administration, but it bears the endorsement of Mr. Willkie, the presidential candidate of the Republican Party.

Regardless of the outcome of the recent election, the President of the United States would stand committed to a continuation of this policy. Such risks as may accompany it would have been accepted as willingly by Mr. Willkie as they have been accepted by Mr. Roosevelt. Consequently, we have been unable to follow the reasoning of those who have asserted that a vote for the re-election of Mr. Roosevelt represented a vote for war.

Since it may be said now, without any suspicion of political propaganda and without effect upon the campaign itself, we reiterate the thought that the question of war or peace for the United States depends, not upon who sits in the White House, but upon the reaction of Germany, Italy and Japan to the established and accepted policies of this Republic.

So long as Great Britain continues its magnificent resistance against Germany, there is little prospect that Herr Hitler will pick a quarrel with the United States. So long as China continues to engage the Japanese Army in the Far East and Russia sits sullenly on the side-lines, the Japanese are not going to pick a fight with this country.

Should the British defense collapse, or Russia enter into a pact with Germany and Japan, there is some prospect that Germany and Japan will exhibit their displeasure, but it would be doubtful whether, even then, either would court a hostile clash with the United States. Only the complete collapse of British resistance will pave the way for a totalitarian advance against us.

This being the situation in the international field, and we believe it truly represents the outlook for the United States, the policy of non-belligerency, including all possible assistance to Great Britain, is warranted, not through a feeling of friendship for the British, but in the interest and for the protection of the United States.

10 Points Given For Handling Beef Cattle

L. I. Case, Extension animal husbandman of N. C. State College, says there are 10 fundamental points in beef cattle production. He lists them as follows:

1. Beef cattle cannot be produced economically without utilizing pastures to the maximum.
2. Make use of the less saleable roughage as much as possible, especially with the breeding herd during the winter months.
3. Use a purebred bull, preferably a proven sire. Not only should the bull be a good individual, but he should be of good ancestry.
4. Provide a balanced ration, including proteins, necessary minerals, and vitamins.
5. Do not construct or maintain costly quarters for beef cattle. Overhead costs must be kept low.
6. Keep animals free from parasites, both internal and external. Feeding parasites is always too expensive.
7. Make an effort to secure a high percentage of calves. The main causes for the low percentage of calf crops are contagious abortion, and lack of attention at breeding and calving time.
8. Conserve the manure. Since the maintenance of soil fertility is a much greater problem than can be satisfactorily met by the use of commercial fertilizers, the proper conservation of manure is an important consideration.
9. Have pigs to follow fattening cattle. One pig to two or three steers will add profit to the enterprise.
10. Guard against disease, especially Bang's disease and tuberculosis.

Declaring Himself

A small boy called on his aunt, who lived on the other side of town. "Hello, Auntie Sue, nice day." After a moment of embarrassed pause, he added: "Auntie Sue, I smell something that seems like pie with raisins in it."

"Yes, Billy, I have some mince pies, but they're for company."

He pondered this and then said, hopefully, "I came to make a little bit of a visit myself."
