

N. C. TAX SUPERVISORS TO HOLD ANNUAL MEETING IN CHAPEL HILL DECEMBER 12-13

Institute of Government Head Announces the Meeting and Invites Perquimans County's Supervisor

The Perquimans County tax supervisor has been invited by Aubert Coates, Director of the Institute of Government, to attend the annual meeting of the North Carolina Tax Supervisors' Association to be held in the Institute of Government building in Chapel Hill on December 12-13.

The Association in conjunction with the Institute of Government, has been making a state-wide survey of county practices with respect to penalties charged for late-listing, and the use of tax maps. The results of this survey will be considered at the meeting, together with other problems of immediate practical importance to all tax supervisors. The program will include such vital topics as Tax Exemptions, Tax Mappings, Methods of Listing Real and Personal Property, Methods in the Valuation of Real and Personal Property, The Listing and Valuation of Intangibles and Distribution of Revenues Derived Therefrom, and Miscellaneous Problems presented by tax supervisors.

The tax supervisors will attend three sessions of three hours each, with registration at 2:30 P. M., Thursday at the Institute of Government building. The first session begins at 3 P. M., Thursday, while other sessions are scheduled for 7:30 Thursday evening and 9 Friday morning. The final session will close at noon Friday with a luncheon of all tax supervisors and their guests.

Navy Wants Recruits Between 17 And 18

In an effort to build up its enlisted strength another 100,000 men, the United States Navy is seeking quality as well as quantity. Information coming from the U. S. Navy Recruiting Station at Norfolk is to the effect that because of the recently changed age requirement young men between the ages of 17 and 18 are now being accepted for minority enlistment, to serve until their 21st birthday. Men between 18 and 31 are enlisted for a term of six years.

Southern Cooking

In the South where cotton and cooking are equally famed, thousands of thrifty housewives find that cottonseed oil products add to the tastiness of famed Southern foods. This newspaper today presents the first of a new series of illustrated recipes in which cottonseed oil products play a leading role. Each recipe has been prepared by an eminent authority on Southern foods and tested by a nationally famed home economist.

STILL ENOUGH AND TO SPARE

She had been a young girl during that war which was fought to "end all wars"—Remember? And she recalled that they had saved peach seeds for gas masks and tin-foil for something or other. She remembered meatless days and sugar rations and flour that was never white. Everyone was called upon to do something during the war, even if it was only to go without candy.

And so, as the new war, that is still without a name, grew more threatening and the United States began to arm for defense, she wanted to do something again, even if it was only to go without.

"But without what?" she asked the man who knows about things. "Should we eat less food at our house? Or buy fewer clothes and put off painting the house?"

The man who knows things surprised her with his answer. "Eat all you want," he said, "and be thankful. Buy new clothes. Paint your house. There is still enough, and to spare, of peace-time supplies in the United States. And it's best to keep our standard of living as high as possible while we build the armaments we need for our own defense and for that nation which is fighting for the Freedom we value."

Perhaps there will not be as many new automobile models as usual in the next year or two. Or as rapid developments in electric refrigeration. Or as many new fabrics and new lighting effects, as industry turns its attention to Defense. But manufacturing has come a long way since 1917 and '18, and it is possible today for the United States to turn out a wealth of every-day necessities and build the sinews of war at the same time.

Perhaps the time will come before this upheaval is over and the world has found peace again when we will have to deny ourselves some of the luxuries we are used to. If it does come we will "tighten de belt" as Charlie Chaplin says in "The Dictator" "without a murmur" . . . But until then, let us keep on living as fully and as beautifully as possible—and keep alive in at least one great country in the world—the "pleasant ways of peace."
