Carolina Bird-Lore

The Bald Eagle is a bird of wooded lakes and seashores. It is found throughout the United States and Canada, but is most abundant in Florida and along the coasts of British Columbia and Alaska. In North Carolina, it is common only at the coast. It is the Golden Eagle, not the Bald, which is the storied bird of fierce character and mountain eyrie.

One nest which the writer examined may be taken as typical. It was February, but the two eggs had already been laid. The nest, six feet deep and four feet across, was fifty feet high in a tree in the center of a small island surrounded by a narrow moat of water. One parent perched over the nest, while the other circled just above the tree-tops, uttering its shrill cry and displaying its pure white tail and head. The eggs hatched late in March and the eaglets remained in the nest until mid-June.

The principal food of the Eagle is fish. Many waterfowl are taken, usually the old, the weak, and the wounded, as well as much carrion. Depredations on farm animals are rare.

The Bald Eagle is non-aggressive and dignified, meriting our fullest protection. Ever since it became our national emblem in 1782 it has steadily decreased in numbers until today it is rare where before it was abundant, because of unjustified and needless shooting. The Eagle is protected in North Carolina, and every bird shot is in violation of the State law.

The Bald Eagle can be told from all other birds of prey except the Golden Eagle by the larger size, it being about three feet in total length with a wing spread of about seven feet. The adults can always be known in addition by the white head and tail. Immature birds can seldom be distinguished with certainty in the field from the Golden Eagle, but in the hand can be known by having the tarsus bare while the Golden Eagle has it feathered to the toes.

It will be good news to those who want more information about this bird and the other 384 species to be found in the State that plans are underway to publish immediately a revised edition of "The Birds of North Carolina" by Pearson, Brimley, and Brinley. There will be 400 pages, 24 full-size color illustrations, 340 black and white. The price is $2.25 (or small) if ordered before publication. Order through H. T. Davis, Director, N. C. State Museum, Raleigh, payment to be made when notice is given that book is ready for distribution.

16 Counties To Have Co-Op Lamb Markets

L. I. Case, Extension animal husbandman of N. C. State College, says lamb grading and cooperative lamb marketing will be conducted this year in 16 North Carolina counties. He invites farmers who are interested in this improved method of selling livestock to contact their county agents.

The counties where the co-op sale will originate are: Camden, Chowan, Pasquotank, Washington, Hyde, Tyrrell, Martin, Edgecombe, Pitt, Wilson, and Onslow in the East; and Alleghany, Ashe, Watauga, Mitchell, and Buncombe in the West.

Case suggested that farmers in these and nearby counties avail themselves of the opportunity to market their lambs at higher prices, and on a graded basis whereby they may learn from others how they rate as producers of quality sheep.

The Extension specialist strongly urges that lambs be trimmed when they are one to two weeks old. "The trimmed lamb," he says, "carries a letter concerning health, a higher percentage of fat, a higher and is more lightly dressed by packer, retailer and consumer."
