FRIDAY, JANUARY 8, 1943

NO POWER CAN DEFEAT GOD: Be not afraid of sudden fear, neither of the desolation of the wicked, when it cometh. For the Lord shall be thy confidence, and shall keep thy foot from being taken.—Prov. 3:25-26.

Recognition For Farmers

The Department of Agriculture announces that it is considering a plan to give merit awards to farmers who, in 1943, achieve unusual production of foodstuffs needed by the United States.

We agree with Secretary Wickard that the farmers' contribution to the welfare of the nation is "richly deserving of recognition" and we hope that some scheme can be worked out that will result in the just award of certificates to loyal and patriotic farmers.

Vegetable Gardens In Style!

In view of the contemplated rationing of more than two hundred articles of food, canned and preserved, it is probably unnecessary to suggest to Perquimans County people that they make plans for a vegetable garden in 1943 and, so far as possible, preserve foodstuffs for use when fresh vegetables and fruits are not available.

The part of our population living in agricultural and semi-agricultural areas will probably fare better than the city dwellers in regard to food supply but only if they take advantage of available opportunities to grow and preserve foodstuffs to supplement available supplies.

Hitler's Two Chances To Win

An American newspaper correspondent, writing from London, says that, as the British see it, Hitler's only chance to win this war is to drive a wedge between the Allies or cut them off from one another by sea.

Aprons the first chance, it is worth noting that Hitler has always depended upon Quislings in all countries. He openly declared that he would destroy his enemies from within and asserted that he would find willing helpers, saying, "We shall not need to bribe them, they will come of their own accord. Ambition and delusion, party squabbles and self-seeking arrogance will drive them."

The probability is that the unity of the United Nations is now too strong for Hitler to place great dependence upon his strategy of destroying from within. Just the same, there is a danger. We have in the United States vociferous critics of Great Britain and there is some danger that party squabbles in this country will divert the nations attention from the main business of winning the war.

Many military and naval experts believe that the construction of U-boats is engaging unprecedented attention in Germany because the Nazis understand that the outcome of the great conflict depends upon control of the sea. Only by maintaining sea supremacy can the United Nations hope to secure effective combat action in the far-flung areas of combat in the Pacific, in Africa, in Europe and in Russia.

Undoubtedly, this peril has been foreseen by Anglo-American leaders. Great emphasis is being placed upon the construction of destroyers and other vessels capable of waging war upon U-boats. Moreover, the use of patrol planes continues to impede the U-boats, some of which have been destroyed by aerial attacks.

With American soldiers in Great Britain, in North Africa, in the Southwest Pacific and in various other overseas posts, it is necessary for the United States to strain every resource to assure a safe line of supply. Not only must we deliver the fighting men and the tools of warfare to the combat areas, but, always, we must be in a position, if necessary, to transfer our soldiers whenever safety demands their removal.

TOUGHER GOING AHEAD

Emphasis On Unity

General Giraud's arrest of certain French leaders in North Africa furnishes fresh and somewhat startling evidence of this war's political pitfalls. Fuller information may satisfactorily explain and justify this action of the new High Commissioner, as in fact necessary to "prevent further assassinations." But General Giraud's refusal to divulge the names of the men involved while stating that some of them are among his best friends adds confusion to a confused situation. Moreover, the report that two of them are officers who aided the American landings in Africa creates an unfortunate impression.

And this happens just when it had begun to appear that replacement of Admiral Darlan by General Giraud had opened the way to unity among Frenchmen Americans who have become increasingly impatient, first with continued recognition of Vichy and second with the "affaire Darlan," are exploding: "Why doesn't General Eisenhower take over and tell those Frenchmen what's what?"

Doubtless the State Department would answer that "taking over" a country isn't so simple—as the Nazis have learned. It will be remembered that although manifestly dissatisfied with the Petain-Darlan type of collaboration, the Nazis waited many months before exercising more complete control of French administration through Laval, and then more months before taking charge themselves. There is much more to the question in North Africa than getting military footholds. Yet those footholds make the American Army the ultimate authority in French Africa and America will be held responsible for any failure to clarify and unify French efforts.

Too much should not be made of evidences of disunity. That is what Berlin wants. The fine response of the Fighting French forces to General Giraud as successor to Darlan is far more important than the latest contretemps. And if General de Gaulle carries through the plan to visit Africa and after conferences there comes to the United States, there will be bright hopes for a unified and greatly invigorated French front. The emphasis should be on this prospect.—Christian Science Monitor.
