Dairymen Urged To Grow More Proteins

Since protein feeds are short and the outlook for an adequate supply over the next twelve months is far from encouraging, J. A. Arey, in charge of Dairy Extension at N. C. State College, urges all dairymen to conserve the proteins now on hand and to make every effort possible to grow an increased supply.

When the pasture is lush, it carries high protein, and very little additional protein is needed in the grain mixture. The same is true for good leafy, well-cured legume hay, but this type of hay is often hard to get. To fill in the feeding gaps during the summer, Arey suggests Sudan grass, soybeans and lespedeza. By the middle of July, grazing in the permanent pasture is usually short and its protein content has dropped considerably below the June level. Unless this condition is offset by some good, supplemental grazing, or other protein feed, which will be mighty hard to get, a serious drop in the milk flow will take place.

Good permanent pastures, plus an adequate supply of supplemental grazing crops, can provide a large part of the protein needed for commercial milk production during the summer, according to Arey, and he urges every dairymen to seriously consider the present protein shortage and make plans now for growing additional acreage of high producing protein crops. Otherwise, some dairymen will find it necessary to give short rations.

In saving hay for next winter's feed supply, Arey pointed out that most dairymen and farmers can save much better hay than they do, by cutting it at the right time and giving it the care and attention which it deserves.
