Cotton Bagging Made Available For Potato Crop

Additional supplies of heavy cotton bagging for handling the early commercial potato crop in North Carolina and Virginia recently have been made available by the War Production Board, and Perquimans County growers should place their orders as quickly as possible to insure an adequate supply, according to Dr. E. S. White, Chairman of the County USDA War Board.

This cotton material, he said, was made available for this purpose after urgent appeals from potato growers and agricultural officials in face of the greatly increased acreage this year.

"This material is heavy fabric and has been found suitable for handling potatoes," Dr. White said. "Now that it is available, it is up to the growers to place their orders in time to assure delivery in sufficient quantities to take care of the crop this year. The sooner your dealer knows your needs, the sooner he will be able to determine how many bags he will need for the season."

He asserted that agricultural officials have been assured that burlap bagging will not be available this year in sufficient quantities to take care of the early potato crop, and urged farmers not to delay orders on the hope of obtaining burlap bags.

He estimated the early potato crop in North Carolina at 56,000 acres, of which about 200 acres are in Perquimans County. It is expected the yield from approximately 54,191 acres will be sold in bags.
