

Harvey Point Group Contacted Japs In Big Pacific Battle

Of interest to people of Hertford was the news released last Friday that a group of PBM's flown by men formerly stationed at Harvey Point played an important role in the huge battle staged two weeks ago near the Marianas, during which the Japs lost many ships and more than 300 planes.

The story written by William L. Wordan, Associated Press writer, stated the PBM's had flown thousands of miles to maintain contact with the Jap fleet as the task force attempted to join the battle.

One group of the PBM's were directed to land near Saipan and it was Lieut. Comdr. William Scarpino who led this group. They found the Jap fleet there. Lieut. H. F. Arle first spotted it, but an attempt to radio the American fleet was unsuccessful, so Arle flew his PBM to the fleet to notify the commander of the whereabouts of the Jap fleet.

Twenty-four hours later two other pilots, Lieut. S. E. Gordinier and Lieut. D. T. Felix spotted the Japs as they attempted to escape from the Americans. The Japs mistook

Lieut. Gordinier to be one of their planes and lighted up the Jap carrier so he might land. Gordinier, having no bombs, left the scene as fast as possible and without damage to his plane or crew before the Japs could open fire when they discovered the plane was American.

Last day planes from the U. S. task force made contact and went to work on the Jap fleet and the PBM's returned to routine patrols at Saipan.
