WHITEY STOPS AN EPIDEMIC

Whitey Fisher ran into some real trouble the other day just after he received his first shipment of baby chicks. "Bunch of them," he said, "started running around like crazy and going into convulsions."

Luckily, Whitey's a wide-awake boy. Without wasting any time, he isolated the funny-acting chicks, and sent a couple of them to the State College Poultry Division Laboratory for a check-up. Turned out they had Newcastle Disease. But—because Whitey was on the ball—the rest of the flock was saved.

It pays to keep your eyes open and act fast whenever you see a way to improve conditions. It's like the way the beer industry of this state is working with the North Carolina ABC Board these days.

No matter what business you're in, it's best to keep a sharp lookout—make sure things are always up to snuff. That way you know your investment will "stay healthy."
