WILLIS SMITH IS OPPOSED TO THE BRANNAN PLAN

"Secretary Brannan Himself Conceded That He Has No Idea As To How It Would Work Or How Much It Would Cost."

Brannan would experiment with agriculture, upon which our entire economy is based.

"I favor a farm program essentially like the one now in existence for tobacco farmers, one which would protect price levels against disastrous decline and would not be a drain on the Federal treasury: It seems to me this sort of program ought to be carried forward with respect to other crops."

"IT IS A FANTASTIC SCHEME WHICH COULD WRECK THE NATIONAL TREASURY"

"I prefer to take my stand with Congressman Harold Cooley and North Carolina farm organizations who voted practically unanimously against the plan at their last State Conventions." (The Grange voted unanimously and the Farm Bureau voted about 400 to 11 against it).

"I consider the Brannan plan neither a fair deal nor a program and it would provide a system of subsidies entirely out of line with our present farm program and would amount to a series of experiments of the rankest uncertainty."

His Stand Is Praised

(An Editorial From The Fayetteville Observer) Willis Smith: His Anti-Brannan Stand Square With The Farmers

Willis Smith's unqualified opposition to the Brannan Plan places him squarely in accordance with the best thought of North Carolina farmers on this subject.

Mr. Smith, candidate for the United States Senate, has branded the Brannan Plan as a "fantastic scheme" which would "well-nigh wreck the national treasury."

It could also well-nigh wreck what little balance is left in American economy today after so many years of war emergency and near-socialistic governmental planning.

The farmers need a friend in Washington who will not run off after every crackbrained panacea that is dreamed up by organized spending.

Mr. Smith is in favor of something like the present program for the tobacco and cotton farmers. This is a program not cooked up in a Washington office overnight, but worked out the hard way over a number of years by the trial and error

Mr. Smith is winning many friends in the present campaign by his conservatiam, by his unwillingness to be hurried into en-dorsing radical departures from the tried and true path of normal Americanism.

His steadfast opposition to the Brannan Farm Plan, which would let production run wild and would have the farmers working for the government instead of themselves, is characteristic of his middle-of-the-road

And in these days of wild ideas, many of which could ruin the country, sanity is what we need nothing else more than in a United

WILLIS SMITH SAYS: "Continuation of a successful program depends upon keeping the administration of the program close to the farmers. I shall keep in constant contact with the farmers and with their organizations and support those measures which will tend to give the rank and file of farmers a voice in this program."
