

Army Reserves Not Exempted In Draft

Many reservists throughout this area are of the opinion that because of their reserve status they are exempt for military duty under the selective service. This is a false impression, Sgt. Paul R. Fisher, head of the Elizabeth City Army and Air Force recruiting station, states.

The Sergeant pointed out that individuals joining the reserve after June 24, 1948, and who had never served on active duty in the Armed Forces are classified as 1-A and subject to immediate military service.

On the other hand if a non-veteran enlisted in the reserve corps, prior to June 24, 1948, he would be exempt from active military service provided, that his service in the reserve unit is "satisfactory."

Another group includes the reservist who served 90 days active duty, but less than one year after September 16, 1940, and then enlisted or joined a reserve unit prior to June 24, 1948, he would be exempt at the discretion of the local board, Sgt. Fisher pointed out.

Sgt. Fisher also stated that any veteran, regardless of his present status, who served in the Armed Forces for 90 days between December 7, 1941 and September 2, 1945, or served for a period of 12 months between September 16, 1940 and June 24, 1948, would be classified as a veteran and placed in 4-A category.

Poison Plants May Be Killing N. C. Livestock

Poisonous plants may have been responsible for some of the recent cattle losses in North Carolina, pasture and livestock specialists at State College revealed this week.

On at least one eastern Carolina farm where several cattle had been lost, Sam Dobson, extension pastures specialist, found wild cherry bushes that "had been grazed as high as the animals could reach." Wild cherry is known to be poisonous, says Dobson, especially the wilted leaves. While there was no positive evidence that these animals died from poisoning, the circumstances pointed to that conclusion.

"Animals with certain deficiencies develop a depraved or abnormal appetite," says J. Clark Osborne, veterinarian with the Experiment Station. Such animals may chew on objects and eat plants which they normally would refuse.

Of the thousands of plants found in the State, only about 50 or 60 are considered poisonous to livestock. About ten of these are responsible for most of the losses. They are: white snakeroot, lambkill kalmia, mountain laurel, black (wild) cherry, common chokecherry, spotted water-hemlock, Carolina jessamine, yellow buckeye, crow poison and pink deathcamas.

These plants are listed and described in Experiment Station Bulletin No. 342, "Stock Poisoning Plants in North Carolina." The specialists urge all livestock farmers to secure a copy of this bulletin from their county agent. If there is any question, farmers should send specimens of suspicious plants to the Botany Department, North Carolina State College, Raleigh, for correct identification.

Any plants identified as poisonous should be removed from the pastures, fence rows, and all places within reach of grazing animals.

Following the meeting a Bible quiz was given with Crafton Phillips winning the prize.

The honoree received a basket of beautiful and useful gifts which she opened and acknowledged.
