An Even Break

Perquimans County children are getting at least an average break on activities planned by adults to produce a better "next generation" it was revealed here last Friday when representatives of many agencies met to discuss local plans pertaining to the White House Conference on Children and Youth.

While this county is without an overall planning board, or organization set up for the purpose of directing youth activities, and that without doubt is regrettable, reports made at the county conference showed that we do have a number of individual organizations which devote time and effort toward giving children training for future responsibilities, and at the same time provide for wholesome growth.

Outstanding reports on youth work were made by representatives of the County 4-H Clubs, the Red Cross, Welfare Department, and groups sponsoring Boy and Girl Scouts. Added to these are individual churches which carry out youth programs for children in various communities of the county. Revealing was a report by the Superintendent of Welfare concerning juvenile delinquents in this county. This report showed only three cases during the past year, which is a far better record than most communities have, and it might be reported that the three cases here were given sufficient attention to correct the situations existing.

A common thought is that little is done, especially in small communities, for the good of our children, but with reports such as were made here last week, we believe this community can justly be proud of the record and take heart to provide even greater advantages for the youth of our county.

Cases In Point

The United States Government, in its handling of foreign affairs, throws the weight of this country on the side of the free nations but, nevertheless, exhibits an independence in action that often disturbs and alarms its associates.

Our friends in other countries do not understand the workings of American politics nor the concessions that Congress often makes to placate pressure groups. They fail to understand that these political acts, while inconsistent with established foreign policy, do not of themselves indicate any weakening on the part of the government itself.

Recently, the United States Senate voted for a compulsory loan of $100,000,000 to Generalissimo Franco in Spain. This, of course, is expected to bring some votes to the Democratic Party and is considered politically a "good thing."

The action of the Senate, which may be followed in the House overlooks the very definite decision of Western European nations that they want to have nothing to do with General Franco. Our action, if it becomes final, will be misunderstood by millions of people in the free nations of Western Europe.

Somewhat along the same line is the determination of the United States to use a naval force to prevent an invasion of the island of Formosa. While the purpose of the blockade is to neutralize the war between the Chinese factions, the likely prospect is that the Communist-dominated government in China will launch its invasion of Formosa. This will bring about a clash between American naval forces and Communists and might even develop into a war. If this occurs there is also the possibility that Chinese forces might move to the assistance of the North Koreans in expelling the westerners from Korea.

The action of the United States Government was taken despite the fact that it is not supported by our Asiatic allies nor, for that matter, the European countries which have a definite interest in the Far East. The situation has not been improved by the recent visit of General MacArthur to Generalissimo and Mme. Chiang Kai-shek nor the effects being helped by the hurried trip of Averill Harriman to the Far East.
