Hertford Mills Joins In Celebration Of Golden Anniversary

This year the Wesson Oil and Snowdrift People, who comprise one of the largest industrial families which serve Southern agriculture and the nation's consumers, will celebrate the 50th anniversary of the manufacture of their premium shortening, Snowdrift.

The employees of the Hertford Mill, which has been an integral part of the industrial life of Hertford since 1935, form an important branch of the great Southern industry that is Wesson Oil and Snowdrift today.

Here, for years, an ever-increasing bulk of cottonseed has been brought in from the fields of the South. Here, men and machinery have refined from the fruitful seed a steady flow of vegetable oil for American and world markets.

The progress and growth of such products as Snowdrift and Wesson Oil really began more than 50 years ago. For to tell the story of these nationally-known products, is to recount the history of the cottonseed oil industry in the South.

Prior to the developing of the crushing industry, cottonseed had no cash value. With each 100 lbs. of cotton fiber, the cotton plant yields approximately 160 lbs. of cottonseed—not more than 18 lbs. of this seed are needed to plant the following year's crop. While the crushing mills made possible many uses of the cottonseed cake and meal, it was the cottonseed oil and its by-products that were destined to pay great dividends to the Southern farmer. Cottonseed oil is used almost entirely as a food, and the most important single use of cottonseed oil is the manufacture of shortening.

Snowdrift was the first of the quality shortenings containing cottonseed oil to appear on the grocery market, at the turn of the century. It is today a fine product—still the favorite shortening of millions of American housewives.

But edible cottonseed oil was made possible by the great determination of one man. Had it not been for a renowned chemist named David Wesson, housewives today might still be cooking without Wesson Oil and Snowdrift. Although the nutritional properties of cottonseed oil have always been present, American consumers shunned its use for shortening and salad oil. In 1899, "Doc" Wesson, then employed by the predecessor company of Wesson Oil and Snowdrift, sent a container of cottonseed oil to the president of his company with this note: "I am sending you a sample of that odorless and flavorless cottonseed oil I promised you. Try it out and let me know what you think of it." The president did, and one year later "Snowdrift"—a white, fluffy shortening made largely with cottonseed—appeared on the market.

It was the Brooklyn-born David Wesson's process—a means of shooting steam through cottonseed oil in a vacuum to render it appetizing—plus the business acumen and know-how of Southern refinery men that gave rise to a typically American major industry—the cottonseed oil industry, which today returns a large part of the Southern cotton farmer's total cash income.

The Wesson Oil and Snowdrift Company produces Wesson Oil, Snowdrift, and well-known shortenings for bakers. The company's wholly-owned subsidiaries make Blue Plate mayonnaise, margarine, salad dressing, sauces, spices, coffee, tea and peanut butter and pack a large share of the shrimp canned in the United States. Yet, the company's principal industry is the processing and distributing of cottonseed oil and its by-products. It is the nation's oldest and largest firm operating hard by the farmer's elbow.

THIS WEEK'S HEADLINES

In Washington the 82nd Congress convened Wednesday to begin the task of shaping the policies of this nation for the months ahead. The 81st Congress adjourned Tuesday, after having passed several measures to provide funds for the emergency. The new Congress is expected to continue the study of the defense needs of the nation and will, in all probability, vote increases in taxes to help defray the higher costs involved with building up the national defenses.

Governor W. Kerr Scott, addressing the opening session of the North Carolina General Assembly this week in Raleigh, called upon the legislators to continue the State's "go forward" program by providing ways and means for improvement of the state's rivers and harbors, continuation of rural electrification, rural telephones and the primary road system. Governor Scott reported on the progress of the secondary road program and stated the program is progressing rapidly at costs lower than estimated.

On the war front in Korea, Chinese Communists have broken through UN defense lines north of Seoul, and the South Korean government fled the city. Communist troops were reported only eight miles from the capital, and pressing forward with overwhelming superiority in manpower. UN troops, reports state, have taken a tremendous toll of Communist lives in the battle which has raged since New Year's day.

Russia has replied to a note tendered by the United States, Britain and France for a meeting of the Big Four to iron out tension on the international problems, but reports from Washington state the reply, while apparently approving the request, is so framed to be only additional propaganda for the Russians. Diplomatic officials of the Big Three are now studying the reply for the purpose of determining if such a meeting will ease the international tension.

Charles F. Sumner Retires As Local Mail Carrier

Capt. Charles F. Sumner, Hertford mail carrier for the past 28 years and three months, was retired January 1, 1951, it was announced here this week.

Mr. Sumner began his duties as the first mail carrier in Hertford on October 1, 1922. He served under six postmasters during his years of service, these being Hilary Winslow, J. P. Jessup, Edgar Morris, S. M. Whedbee, James E. Newby and W. W. White.

Adhering to the postal adage that the mails must go through, Mr. Sumner worked through three hurricanes, and one tornado during his years of service. He missed only two days of mail delivery, and this was due to extremely heavy snows.

He is proud of his record of 27 years without having any reports against him for infraction of postal regulations, nor complaints lodged by any patron of his route.

His route, which he walked each day, measured 15 miles, and it is estimated that during his career as mail carrier he covered distance equal as about five times around the world.

During his years as postal employee he saw the local mail service grow each year, both as to the volume of mail handled here and the number of people taking advantage of the service. Prior to his appointment to the local Post Office Department he served six and one-half years with the U. S. Army, attaining the rank of Captain.

On receipt of the notice of his retirement Mr. Sumner said, "During all the time I was mail carrier my fellow employees and patrons of my route have been pleasant and cooperative to work with, and I greatly appreciate the experience I have had during my service with the local post office."

Polling Places Will Be Open From 6:30 A. M. Until 6:30 P. M.

Perquimans County voters will participate in a special election, to be held Saturday, January 6, to determine whether or not the county shall issue bonds to provide funds for the county school building program.

W. F. Ainsley, chairman of the County Board of Elections, stated today that polling places in the six precincts of the county will be open from 6:30 A. M., to 6:30 P. M., during which time voters may cast ballots on the proposal.

Election officials for the various precincts have been issued the special ballots to be used in the election and all is in readiness for the voting.

The special election was called by the Board of County Commissioners, seeking authority to issue the bonds, for the Board of Education, to raise funds to finish the school building projects scheduled by the Board of Education.

The amount needed to complete the program is $175,000; of this sum four building projects will be finished and some $10,000 to $12,000 will be used to purchase equipment for the schools and new lunchrooms.

Among the four building projects, for which the funds are needed, are two lunchrooms for white grammar schools, a five classroom wing, and heating plant for the Hertford Colored School, and three additional classrooms for the Union School at Winfall.

County authorities propose, if the bond issue is approved, to finance the repayment of the bonds over a period of 25 years, which will mean a small increase in the tax levy to finance the payment.

During recent weeks members of the Board of Education have met with civic groups throughout the county and explained the issue; a large number of these groups have gone on record as approving the election and also the bond issue.
