

THIS WEEK'S HEADLINES

World capitals continue to speculate over peace proposals for Korea, as advanced by Russia's UN representative over a radio broadcast last Saturday. While the proposal contained no definite plan for a ceasefire, the Russian delegate hinted the war can be stopped. Trygve Lie, secretary General of the UN, expressed himself as believing the Russians were sincere in the proposal, but most UN members are being cautious in considering the proposal, and are, apparently, moving slow before accepting the Reds' plan without knowing complete details.

Meanwhile in Korea, the battle between Communists and UN troops continues at a fierce pace. Reports from the war front state the Reds have defended their present positions during the past week intensely, and there are indications the Communists are preparing for another all out attack on the UN lines, which have advanced into North Korea several miles during the past week.

The British-Iran oil dispute remains a hot issue this week. Negotiations over the problem have been broken off, and reports state the Iran government will take over the oil fields and refineries. The Royal Navy ordered one of its cruisers to the scene this week to protect British lives. The British Oil Company has ordered its tankers to leave Abadan as a move to prevent further trouble. The dispute arose over Iran's proposal to nationalize its oil industry.

A sordid story of youthful crimes was disclosed to a Senate committee this week during an investigation of use and sale of narcotics. A probe has revealed widespread traffic in dope in a number of large cities, among teenage school children. Many young people have testified before the committee, baring facts concerning the dope traffic, and this has led to a proposal of a law carrying a death penalty to those convicted of selling narcotics.

County Agent Urges Cotton Farmers To Start Dusting Crop

Perquimans County farmers, who have not already begun dusting their cotton to control weevils, were urged this week by County Agent I. C. Yagel, to do so immediately. Weekly boll weevil counts, the Agent said, are being made in the county, in cooperation with the State Cotton Committee, and weevil emergence is on the increase in this area of the State.

Dry weather, size of plants and other factors are greatly influencing weevil activity. Before squares are formed weevils can be found in the bud of the plant and authorities report when one weevil is found in 100 plants it is time to begin dusting.

For boll weevil control 20% Toxephene is recommended at the rate of 8 to 10 pounds per acre. As the plants get larger more dust will be required. For best results dust should be applied when there is no wind to blow it away, either early morning, late afternoons and nights is the best times to apply. Dusting should be repeated every 6 to 7 days regardless of rains during the present period so long as the infestations are as high as 5% to 10%.

Checking a few fields in various parts of the county does not give a true picture of county-wide conditions, the Agent stated, but it does give some idea as to the situation. He added that last year farmers who followed through on dusting was the one who had the cotton to harvest, and he urged all producers to join in the program this year.
