Uncle Sam's Labor Plans

A number of labor unions are now seeking wage increases and other benefits. Washington officials are hard pressed to settle these demands, without strikes and without breaking down the program to prevent inflation.

A panel of the Wage Stabilization Board is now considering demands of the CIO steel workers for a pay boost. Aluminum workers numbering thirty-four thousand are also seeking higher pay and John L. Lewis is expected to make a similar move this spring. In addition, there is a wage dispute in the aircraft industry.

While it is true that strikes in key industries rarely occur when the Stabilization Board is considering a case, the more important question is will the Board make a decision to permit a break-thru in present wage ceilings?

Management has taken the position that wage boosts must be accompanied by price increases. Some of the labor unions are seeking more than wage increases. The steel workers, for example, are seeking a guaranteed annual wage.

About the only thing certain is that a big batch of labor troubles have been placed in the government's lap.

Founder Of A Nation

The man who was most influential in the successful founding of the United States was, of course, George Washington, whose birthday anniversary is observed this month. It is interesting to note that, in the years immediately after Washington's death, people thought it was fashionable to depreciate the great contribution he made to the successful establishments of the United States as a world power.

Not long ago, one of the country's great historians remarked that, happily, that vogue had changed direction. Actually, he said, the more one studied the life and contributions of George Washington, the more he appreciated the breadth of his talent and ability. A great general, a great President, a great engineer and a great American—George Washington left an imprint which is visible in the freedom and enjoyment of life of every American.

During the bitter winters of the war, he, at times, was faced with almost hopeless tasks. There were times when the Continental Army was at the point of disbanding. There were other times when the money was not available to pay off these volunteers. There were still other times when loyal subjects and the enemy almost persuaded a majority that the cause was hopeless.

In the end, George Washington and his men saw the storm out and enjoyed the bright victory that finally came. After that, George Washington became President of the new republic and refused—when pressed—to accept a third term in office, which he could surely have obtained. This set a long precedent, which has now been established by constitutional amendment. The wisdom of Washington's decision then is more apparent today than it was even at that time.

Washington, then, not only secured the freedom of the country from England but he established many of the principles of government, as our first President. His high standards of conduct, morality, ethics and statesmanship were and are today an example for Americans in public office. Indeed, this is a proper time to stop and reflect upon the character, courage and determination of Washington—which is so much in need in government today. Because Washington had all these qualities, we are enjoying the fruits of liberty and strength.
