

Question—How can I control lice on cattle?

Answer—On beef cattle use a spray of 40 per cent wettable DDT. For treating 10 animals, mix a quarter of a pound (10 tablespoonfuls) in three gallons of water.

However, DDT should not be used on dairy cows. Instead, use a spray made from Methoxychlor, which is also a wettable powder.

Spray all the animals in the herd at least once. Give badly infested cattle a second spraying about three weeks later.

Question—Does State College recommend the use of infrared heat lamps for brooding baby chicks?

Answer—T. T. Brown, associate professor of poultry science, says that so little information is available on the subject at present that infrared brooding cannot properly be recommended or condemned.

There are both advantages and disadvantages. The birds are easily visible, labor is saved, the initial cost is low, and the litter under the brooder is kept dry. However, the cost of operation is relatively high, damage may be caused by power interruptions, and the litter away from the brooder area may become quite damp.

If infrared brooding is used, an electrician should be consulted regarding the size wire to be installed. Also, it is necessary to place a guard around the brooder.

Eyesight Factor In Delinquency

Inadequate eyesight is often an important factor in juvenile delinquency, according to the American Optometric Association which is sponsoring the 26th annual Save Your Vision Week March 2-8.

The child who cannot see to perform his school tasks often seeks self-expression in anti-social behavior, said Dr. J. Otis White, president.

He cited a study in New York City which showed that 90 per cent of a group of delinquent children were found to be school failures, and two studies made by the Ohio State Bureau of Juvenile Research in which it was found that more than 26 per cent of the children brought before juvenile courts were deficient in vision. Surveys in California, Pennsylvania and other states show similar results, he said.

"It is a well known fact that every child wants to excel in some activity," said Dr. White. "The child who fails in school because of inadequate vision may draw attention to himself by breaking windows, stealing or similar anti-social behavior."

He offered two preventive measures: (1) modernization of school buildings to provide a better visual environment; and (2) more comprehensive eyesight examinations in the schools to discover the children who need professional attention.

"Dark, drab, poorly lighted school-rooms seem to cause a high proportion of all visual problems among school children," Dr. White said. "An indication of that is that eyesight problems are more than twice as common in the eighth grade as in the first grade."

"With the aid of modern science, few children need to be visually handicapped. The tragedy is that most schools lack a systematic program for determining whether children have adequate vision."

N. C. 4-H Members Renew Programs

With Spring busting out all over throughout the South, North Carolina has renewed two 4-H programs which are important factors in the development of wholesome family relationships and purposeful, healthful living, the National Committee on Boys and Girls Club Work has announced. They are the Garden and Home Improvement awards programs, designed for both boys and girls.

In 1951, more than 350,000 club members raised 120,000 acres of garden vegetables and small fruits, according to State Club leaders, thereby providing essential and nutritious foods for use throughout the year, and increasing individual and family incomes by reducing the amount of food purchased. About 200,000 members taking part in the 4-H Home Improvement program performed 550,000 tasks, such as making slipcovers and curtains, upholstering and refinishing furniture, and painting or papering rooms to make their homes more comfortable and attractive.

Incentives for outstanding records of achievement in both programs remain the same as last year. Every club member taking part in either program has the opportunity to win one of four county medals of honor. Also a state award of an ill-expense trip to the National 4-H Congress in Chicago next November, and a chance to become a candidate for one of the eight national awards—a $300 college scholarship. Allie Chalmers provides the Garden program awards, and the Sears-Roebuck Foundation those for Home Improvement.

Last year, 230 4-H'ers in 83 of this State's counties received medals for their Garden records, and 149 members in 82 counties won similar recognition for home improvement achievements.

All 4-H programs are supervised by the Cooperative Extension Service.

If money were the only goal in life we know some rich people who would be mighty happy.

No two people think exactly alike, and it takes some married couples a lifetime to find that out.
