

THIS WEEK'S HEADLINES

The United States, Great Britain and France signed a peace pact with Western Germany this week restoring certain rights and privileges to the Bonn government, which were stripped from the Germans seven years ago when the Allies occupied Germany at the close of the war. Under the pact signed Tuesday the Allies will retain troops within Western Germany as a block against invasion and civil war. Russia, which occupies Eastern Germany, hurled threats at the Bonn government in efforts to stall the alignment of the West Germans with the free West, and on Wednesday Berlin reported threats of blockade between East and West Germany.

The Administration won a victory in the Senate on Tuesday when a vote on a billion dollar cut in appropriations for foreign aid defeated the amendment. Washington reports stated another amendment calling for a half billion dollar cut will be taken this week. Administration leaders are fighting efforts to slash the federal budget, which becomes effective July 1.

No decision as yet has been handed down by the Supreme Court on the seizure of the steel industry, but elsewhere on the labor front progress is reported toward settlement of strikes. The oil strike has been eased considerably, and most of the striking unions have returned to work and the Western Union strike was ended Monday when the workers returned to their duties.

With national party conventions scheduled for July, major candidates for the presidential nomination are now battling hard to line up delegates named for the conventions. Reports Wednesday stated General Eisenhower and Senator Taft are practically tied in the number of delegates who are pledged in the Republican race, while in the Democratic party Senator Kefauver still holds a slight lead in delegates over several Democrats, Senator Russell and John F. Kennedy.
