Washington.—The last days of the Congress were very hectic ones. As usual, the appropriations bills were the most important measures to be put in final form before adjournment. We were asked by the President for large sums of money. Congress did appropriate large sums, but not as much as had been requested. Several billions were cut from the amount the President requested.
It is difficult for a member of Congress to judge how far he should go in approving or disapproving an appropriation. For the most part, I voted to cut expenditures, but there were a few instances in which I voted for increases—but they amounted to very little.
I felt that we must reduce government expenditures and I tried to vote accordingly. But last week there were two appropriations which I supported in full, for I thought they were absolutely justified.
Here's what was involved:
In connection with the defense effort, certain areas have undergone sharp increases in population. In our own state, for example, there are Cherry Point, Camp Lejeune, Wilmington, Fort Bragg and others. With the added population in these communities, a problem arises with the sharp increase in the number of children thrust upon the public schools.
Congress had previously promised the local school officials that they could expect help in financing school construction. Therefore, I voted in favor of the $71 million appropriation which had been cut out of the appropriations bill by the committee. When the committee's attention was called to the need for this money, most if not all of the committee members agreed that these items should be put back in the bill. The government's defense program had created the difficulty and I felt it was the responsibility of the Congress to help the local communities with the burden which we had, in effect, placed upon them.

Dick Russell
Senator Russell continues to make progress in his campaign for the Presidency, and it appears that he now has a real chance—depending, of course, upon the outcome of many factors at the Chicago convention.

Going Overseas

Vice President Barides last week designated me as a member of the delegation to represent our Congress at a meeting of the Interparliamentary Union at Bern, Switzerland. I attended this meeting last year at Istanbul, Turkey, and it is a revealing experience to meet legislators from all of our civilized countries and to understand their problems and have them understand ours in America.
It is possible that I may be able to send back some comments for this column at intervals, and many editors have indicated that they desire that I do so. For the present, though, this will be the last of the regular weekly columns—unless I have an opportunity to make a few notes during the Democratic convention at Chicago which would be of interest to you.
I am most grateful to the many newspapers all over North Carolina which have made possible the opportunity for me to discuss my views on matters that have come before the Congress. I have frequently found that when citizens understand the facts, they thoroughly appreciate the

Great Visitation

My friend, Spiros G. Alexiou of Raleigh, and members of his family stopped by to see me the other day. They are typical of the many fine citizens we have in North Carolina of Greek birth and ancestry.
Mr. Alexiou asked me about the new immigration law and I told him of the great misrepresentations made about that law. I think he was surprised to learn that the quota for Greek immigrants had not been disturbed and that there was nothing in the law affecting the good citizens of any race or nationality. He had been dubious of the law because he had read some of the propaganda that had been distributed against this bill.
I did tell him that efforts had been made and would continue to be made to keep out of America those who would come here to join subversive elements—elements which seem bent upon destroying the American system of government and economy.
I was glad to see Mr. Alexiou and his family, and was happy to have the chance to explain the real contents of the immigration bill.
