Many of the subscribers and partons of a newspaper even though they nev-er worked on a paper a day in their lives can tell the editors, the owners and the managers how the paper ought to be run. In getting out a newspaper there are the mechanical difficulties, there are the usual dif-ficulties and there are the unusual

Whether he be a king, president or a general it would take a greater man than Alexander, a Caesar or any modern general, ruler or financier to modern general, ruler or financier to run all the newspapers in the United States. Should any of them try it, in less than thirty days he would drop them quicker than he would drop a red-hot piece of iron. Any President before he got out one week's issues of all the papers we believe would de-cide he did not know when he was well off. Let' any President try taking off. Let any President try taking over and running the newspapers. We believe he would give them back much quicker than he took them over.

RUNNING A NEWSPAPER.
There were feare expressed that the newspapers. If a President had ever tried to run a newspaper we have no fears that he would attempt to desuch an answise thing. If a President had ever tried to run a newspaper we have no fears that he would attempt to desuch an answise thing. If a President was fully acquainted with all that goes into getting out a weekly paper, he might take over the mines, the railroads and the steel plants but still we believe he would pass up henowspapers as a harder job.

Every inch of space in every column has a coet attached to it. The actual coet, of the average weekly newspaper weekly newspapers would be many times more than the subscription price. Unless this deficit is paid by securing paid advertising. Should the United States It would soon become bankrupt.
