

Public Meeting On Conservation To Be Held At Raleigh

The public is invited to attend the Conservation Congress to be held in Raleigh on November 17, 18 and 19 in the Hall of the House of Representatives in the State Capitol, according to George R. Ross, director of the North Carolina Department of Conservation and Development.

The Congress, which is being held under the sponsorship of the Department of Conservation and Development, will be highlighted by a general presentation of programs dealing with the State's human and natural resources and the wiser use of these factors in the life and economy of the people of North Carolina.

Ross said recognized leaders in the fields of human and natural resources are on the program of the Conservation Congress for addresses on subjects concerning the State's recreational facilities, mineral resources, forests and forestry, water resources, wildlife, commercial fisheries, commerce and industry, tourist business, and on contributions made by welfare, health, education, agriculture, and labor agencies as they affect the people.

Plans for a conservation Congress were adopted more than a year ago by the State Board of Conservation and Development.

In connection with the staging of the Congress so that a broader view may be had on conservation activities in North Carolina as they relate to human and natural resources, Director Ross said: "Any conservation program and any development of our State must be tuned to the ever-changing conditions of communication and transportation. Our society is being reorganized constantly, and it is our responsibility to keep constantly before both young and old our obligation to conserve and develop because, for whatever happiness and prosperity we have at this time, we are indebted to the natural resources and the manner in which we have used them."

GODWIN SPEAKS AT SCHOOLMASTERS' CLUB

"The parents were, of course, the first teachers of mankind. You will, therefore, agree that the school represents the aspirations of the parents for their children. The school, which belongs to the people, and is of the people, an extension of the home, represents the ambitions, the aspirations, the goals that mothers and fathers set for their children."

He pointed out that the public school is the responsibility of the teachers and the administrators, and referred to the rapid growth of the school system in our state.

Briefly, he called to mind the fact that North Carolina established the first state operated university in America.

He called for better cooperation of the schools with the parents, the patrons, and he stressed the importance of the teaching of the fundamentals of morality as well as the fundamentals of American government, its history and what we believe in. "If the boy in Korea doesn't know what he is fighting for it is because you didn't teach him," he said.

In closing, the speaker said "we've gone a long way and I am proud of it. But," he continued, "I am anxious to see it a better system. I believe you are as anxious for that as I am, and I believe that if you love your government and your nation and your state as much as I do you will go back to your classrooms and offices more determined that the school shall be the extension of the home."
