

News Report From Washington

One China, Too Many—What To Do? Geneva Bridge Hope—Is And Zoukoff—

Washington—It was more than clear at Geneva that there is one China, too many, with Soviet Russia committed solidly to mainland China and the United States committed to the island remnants of Chiang Kai-shek.

Formosa or Nationalist China, contains only about 14,000,000 people. This country's economy is solely dependent on U. S. aid, which reaches into the hundred million figures every year.

Although the China issue was not one of those to be included in the Geneva talks, it came up, nevertheless, at various times, and the Russian and U. S. positions clashed head-on. In the opinion of many allied diplomats, the United States might as well recognize Communist China, since non-recognition does not make the wrong China disappear.

Yet we must stick by the Nationalists, who have 800,000 men under arms and who have been loyal to the United States for years. We cannot abandon them, no more than start a war to put them back in power. But something must be done. The United States cannot expect to keep China out of the UN forever.

President Eisenhower probably realizes that Red China will finally get into the UN. The biggest nation (in population) in the world will have to be recognized by us eventually. We look upon recognition as denoting approval in Washington but in London recognition is thought merely to conform to the facts. No moral conclusions are drawn.

That is true in most of the other countries of the world. The solution in the Security Council of the UN—where Nationalist China has a permanent seat—may be to give India that seat and let both Chinas be members of the UN.

The Geneva Conference brought more hope to the Americans than anything in years, and yet there were those who were opposed to any top official meeting with the Russians. They had said the President would have to sell out to the Russians to reach any accord at Geneva.

But the President did not sell out and never thought he would be tempted to do so. Perhaps Mr. Eisenhower knew the Reds better than most Americans realized. It was, after all, Ike who was in Europe as head of NATO in 1951 and who had met with Marshal Zhukov.

and written to him, during the cold war period.

If ever there was a chance for Ike to bring his personality into play, Geneva gave him the chance. He rose to the occasion and, in that first opening day speech, he made it clear that the United States wanted only peace. The Russians immediately felt reassured, though Ike had not offered to give away anything.

The Geneva conference was a great battle for the propaganda standpoint. The world had its attention focused on the Swiss town all one week and whatever impressions went out from there, over the wires, were likely to affect the lives and fortunes of people in every part of the world.

The President's peaceful words were excellent propaganda, and those who had feared that the U. S. would lose the propaganda battle at Geneva were heartened by them. By calling Mr. Eisenhower's utterances propaganda, we do not infer that they were so intended. But the mere fact that the President had met with Marshal Zhukov travel three thousand miles to attend a conference and then tell the world we seek only peace, is good advertising.

If you want to hear the whole truth about yourself, anger your neighbor.

—German Proverb

more than possible that we are just as guilty as were these people.

"The wages of sin is death!" it has always been so and it was with the children of Israel who went down into Egypt. God, through Jeremiah, warned that they should be consumed by the sword and by the famine, until there be an end of them. Only a small number of those who had gone into Egypt against Jeremiah's advice were to be permitted to return to their homeland. The people wanted material security—food, shelter, clothing and, in exchange, they lost something far more valuable, they lost their souls, their courage, their ideals and their faith.
