SENATOR SAM ERVIN SAYS

Washington—As this column is being written, the White House Conference on Education is sitting in Washington. This Conference, which is composed of educators and other public-spirited citizens from all sections of the country, was called to consider ways and means to solve unmet educational needs of the public school systems of the Nation.

There is no gainsaying the fact that the Nation is suffering at this time from serious unmet educational needs which arise out of the circumstances that the public school systems of the several states need 180,000 more teachers and 250,000 more classrooms than are presently available. As a result of these tragic shortages in teachers and classrooms, millions of the youth of America are being deprived of their fundamental right to an adequate education at the grade school level.

The tragic state of the public school system in the majority of the states cannot be alleviated by any temporary measures. Since the number of children arriving at school age is constantly increasing, it is apparent that some action of a drastic nature must be taken if we are to have sufficient teachers and classrooms in our public school systems.

The White House Conference on Education is likely to recommend that the Federal Government assist the states in meeting these unmet educational needs. It is altogether likely that the views of the Conference will coincide with those expressed by Senator Lyndon B. Johnson, the Majority Leader, who prophesied sometime ago that Congress will authorize "a school construction program to meet the needs of their children".

In my judgment, Senator Johnson acted wisely in suggesting that the Federal Government can best aid the states in this field by assisting them in the construction of classrooms.

As a matter of fact, the Federal Government has adopted fiscal policies which handicap the states in their efforts to establish and maintain sufficient public school systems. It does this by raking into the Federal treasury an undue amount of income and excise taxes, which are the most easily collected taxes. As the result of this fiscal policy, the state and the local communities are compelled to rely in large part on property taxes for the support of the public school systems.

If Congress is to pass a bill granting Federal aid to the public school systems of the several states, it must insert in the bill provisions depriving the Federal Government of all control over public school education in the several states and restricting the Federal aid granted to public school systems only. Moreover, Congress must refrain from any attempt to use the Federal aid granted as a vehicle for the enforcement of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in the racial segregation field.
