

KNOW YOUR SOCIAL SECURITY

E. S. Bettendorf, Commissioner of the Social Security Administration, is in Hertford the second Wednesday of each month at the Perquimans County Court House.

The banner of America is progress; and the goal of that progress is a better life for all the people. And this is the measure of progress—how do the people, how does the individual citizen fare?

During his productive years, in a prosperous nation such as ours, the working man and his family fare well. And retirement does not end this happy state of affairs. For medical science has steadily increased the life span, and has eliminated, or drastically curtailed many of the diseases which once afflicted older people. Today a retiring worker can reasonably anticipate long life, good health, and leisure time in which to enjoy the fruits of his labor, and pursue the hobby, social and civic activity, and cultural interest he didn't have time for during his working years. Moreover, by the exercise of reasonable diligence and foresight, he can make his retirement financially secure.

The man of foresight will plan the economic aspects of retirement, for this is the cornerstone of the better life for retired persons and their dependents. Insurance, annuities, capital investments, home ownership, and company pensions will be considered. And he will not forget his social security, that is, his old-age insurance. This is an asset too often overlooked. It is available to nearly all (over 9 out of 10) working Americans, and provides a foundation upon which a financially secure retirement may be built.

This social security program provides that upon retirement, insured workers are eligible for monthly benefits ranging from $24 to $108.50. The retired worker's wife is also eligible for monthly benefits. The minimum payable to a retired worker and dependents is generally $45—the maximum $200.

It is recognized that complete wealth, even for retired persons, cannot be considered a better life, or even a good life, for it is alien to progress and the American tradition. Many persons, after retirement, secure part-time employment or self-employment in addition to the hobbies or other interests pursued in leisure time. In the case of the less provident, or less fortunate retired worker, this additional earned income is needed to supplement retirement income. In view of these realities, the old age insurance program provides that once he reaches retirement age, an insured worker is considered retired, and may collect full benefit payments, even though he earns as much as $1200 a year, and a worker is considered partially retired, and may collect some benefits, if his earnings range between $1200 and $2080 a year. A worker who earns more than $2080 in a year, and earns more than $80 wages each month, or is active in self-employment each month, is not considered retired, and may not collect any monthly benefits.

The income restriction does not apply to a social security beneficiary aged 72 or older; and it applies only to earned income (that is, wages or net earnings from self-employment).

The social security program also makes provision for benefit payments to disabled workers at age 50, disabled children or retired or deceased insured workers, and survivors of deceased insured workers (widows, children under 18, disabled children or aged dependent parents).

This old age and survivors insurance program (better known
