

SENATOR SAM ERVIN SAYS

Washington — The foreign aid changes in the Senate have again secured objectivity in legislation to meet the communist peril to the free world. This lack of objectivity was created by the move to lengthen the list of communist satellite countries eligible to receive foreign aid if the President considers it in the national interest and security.

In a recent address before a college graduating class, Senator Theodore Francis Green, of Rhode Island, discussed the peril and cited the frequently raised question of what can be done in the present world crisis to meet this peril to freedom, the like of which has never been noted before in the annals of history.

Words of Warning
Senator Green said: "Communism today poses a very great danger to mankind in general and to us Americans in particular. That menace has no regard for the inherent dignity of man, and has an absolute disregard of all ethical and moral principles, as well as of human sympathy."

Congress is seriously concerned about the peril. This fear manifests itself in the legislative branch of our government by the concern over cutting the United States Army and whether or not the executive branch is sufficiently alert to the urgency of adequate defense. At the same time there has to be sufficient emphasis on modern defense systems and the development of an in-being military posture.

One of my chief concerns is that there is not enough emphasis on research and development. Admittedly there can be excessive amounts wasted trying to keep ahead of the communists in the scientific race. This cannot be permitted to retard our efforts and accomplishments.

I share Senator Green's view that communism poses a serious threat to Americans in particular. As a consequence I have never been able to vote for foreign aid or mutual security for any communist country.

It is regrettable that foreign aid cannot be acted upon in a realistic manner to produce legislation that will provide military and economic support for the needy countries in their efforts to repress communism. To me it is neither morally honest nor wise to give aid to communist satellite countries, the use of which funds will help forge the chains of slavery on the peoples of these satellites.

Legislation Principles
My legislative principles will not let me indulge in the false notion that foreign aid to communist countries is the way to win friends and stop communism. Neither will they permit me to ignore the necessity for adequate military and economic aid to those countries that are genuinely standing alongside the free world in the colossal struggle or to gamble with our security by failing to support an adequate national defense system or to slow up our efforts for world peace.

KNOW YOUR SOCIAL SECURITY

F. E. Bittendorf, representative of the Social Security Administration, is in Hertford the second Wednesday of each month at the Perquimans County Court House.

With the payment of monthly benefits for the first time early in August 1957 to more than 100,000 disabled people between the ages of 50 and 65, the Federal social security program reached a new and important landmark in its mission to promote the financial security of the American family.

The Social Security Disability Program has three major features, it "freezes" or protects a worker's social security earnings record, when he is unable to work because of a severe and long-lasting disability. It makes payments to the disabled worker at age 50 or over, and it makes payments to the disabled sons and daughters of retired workers and insured workers who have died.

By recent Congressional action, the long-disabled worker now has until June 30, 1958, to file an application and still have his social security earnings record protected as of the date he actually became disabled.

However, if the disabled worker is over 50 now, it is important that he file his application as soon as possible, so that he will not lose any monthly benefit payments. When an application is filed, payments can begin with the month of the application. There will not be any benefits paid for months before the date of their applications.

The disability freeze protects the wage earner's future rights to social security benefits for himself and his family, because he might not otherwise have the required work credit at the time he reaches age 65 or dies. Thus, the "freeze" retains full benefits for disabled workers, based on their period of actual employment.

The disability freeze provisions of the Social Security Acts, and the provisions which make possible the payment of monthly disability benefits to thousands of eligible people at age 50, or 15 years before they might otherwise be entitled, make a significant contribution to the overall financial security of the American home. But there is still another provision of the act which provides for the monthly benefits to disabled children over 18 of insured wage earners. Where such children are disabled, however, it is now possible to continue payments to them after age 18. In addition, there are many children of living or deceased wage earners who may be considerably over 18 today but who were dependent on a wage earner prior to their 18th birthday, who may now be eligible to receive disability benefits even though they had not been eligible for any social security benefit heretofore.
